The Rubber Industry

Assurance That the Rubber Industry Is to be a Success.

As all well-informed people are aware, there has been much perturbation in recent years regarding the presumed diminution and possible exhaustion of the raw rubber supply. The increasing demand for this product, its growing importance in the mechanical arts and the gradually ascending quotations for the crude gum in European and American markets seemed to justify the general uneasiness. In view of the fact that the rubber plantations of Hawaii are to have a meeting in Honolulu Monday, the following may be of interest:

Henry C. Pearson, a recognized authority on rubber, contributed an article to the Saturday Evening Post recently in which he took the ground that the production of Para rubber—the Brazilian article—would, under probably greatly improved conditions, be largely increased instead of diminished. At present the business of collecting and merchandizing the raw rubber in that quarter is too costly in every particular; nevertheless, it is suited to existing conditions. The Para rubber supply is a steady flow toward the markets. The Amazonian basin, the home of the great Brazilian rubber tree, is an immense territory, sparsely populated, only partly explored. It has been claimed that the ignorant and reckless natives cut down thousands of rubber trees annually. Mr. Pearson explains that the trees they cut down are those that die after tapping. They are different from the Para type. When cut down the stump promptly sends up shoots, and in seven years there are several trees instead of one. When tapped the new, like the old tree, is destroyed; but cut it down, drain the latex, or fluid rubber, and it flourishes again. The process is going on throughout the Amazon valley; hence, the argument that there is no cause for thinking that there can be a rubber famine in that quarter, even if the trees that yield sap annually in small but regular quantities should show any signs of failing.

The writer referred to recounts the fact that rubber, in one shape or another, grows wild in Mexico, Central America, South America south to Argentina, Africa from Cape Colony up to the Sahara, in a part of Australia, in Java, Sumatra, Borneo, India, the Malay states and the Philippines. It would appear, however, that wild rubber is gathered nowhere yet in a really systematic manner. The other great fact of importance in this connection is that the wild rubber is there for the gathering.

But it is a question whether in the future it will pay to penetrate the almost hopeless jungles in search of this commodity, the reason being that rubber planting in the far east not only promises to be but is actually a success.

Again, while there have been failures and frauds in the rubber plantation business, the fact remains that many plantations in other parts of the world promise to be successful. Para rubber will hold the lead, but Mr. Pearson is free to admit that Castilloa rubber trees yield well, and he adds: "Honest, well-managed rubber plantations are wonderfully profitable, and they will continue and increase." The lesson to be drawn from all this is simply that there has been no real occasion for alarm with regard to the future exhaustion of the rubber supply. Rather do the indications point to an ever increasing yield.

Commercial Happenings

Racy News From the Capitol Regarding Sugar Stock.

By L. D. Timmons.
Honolulu, Jan. 17.
Hawaiian Commercial stock, which had held strong for six or seven days, broke yesterday on bad cable news from San Francisco, and is now weak. This stock is one of the few subject to immediate fluctuation with sugar, on account of the fact that much of it is held on the Coast where people take more account of the daily market for sugar than in the Islands. Thus a decline in stock values over there might reasonably have been expected as a result of the subsidence in the basis for raws at New York.

Thursday and Friday Hawaiian Commercial held at $34 bid and $34.50 asked. These figures followed sales late Wednesday of 50, 35, 10 and 5 shares at $34. On Thursday and Friday there were no sales, but on Saturday 75 shares changed hands at the same old price, $34. Between boards on Monday there was another sale of 25 shares at $34, soon after which the bad news from the Coast arrived, when bidding dropped to $33.50, at which it still stands. This is exactly the San Francisco basis, and the immediate future of the stock in the market will depend upon quotations that may come over the wire from California.

THE SUGAR MARKET
The sugar market is still erratic. From 3.61 and better the price at New York sank to about $3.565, and all the "I told you soes" were ready to parade Honolulu's Wall street as the real article in the prophesy line. But yesterday another story came over the wire, it telling of a rally in sugar, a sweeping advance being made back to 3.60. This was more than had been anticipated even by the habitual optimists, who had hoped the drop would not continue but did not expect an advance. Thus calculations have been upset again, at least for the present.

As anticipated in this column sometime ago, the low price of sugar in America and Europe has resulted in an enormous increase in demand and consumption. The people are using it more freely than ever before because it is cheap, and if that state of things continues the 2,009,000 odd tons extra supply will disappear in surprisingly short order, and the straight residue will stand an excellent chance of coming into its own in the market. It should be remembered that the advance of yesterday came in the face of 112 centrals (last advices) turning out sugar by the ship-load in Cuba and about thirty others due to start in a very few days. Attention is directed to this state of affairs at this point as indicating that the setback to Hawaiian Commercial may reasonably be figured as temporary.

PIONEER MILL.
Pioneer stock has been as low as $175 bid and $182.50 asked during the week. The latter is now asked for the stock, and $179 is bid. These figures do not show the actual condition of the market, however, for while $179 is the highest official bid, all stock appearing at $180 has been snapped up. On Thursday there was a sale of 5 shares at that figure, and the same was paid on the street today for 30 shares.

Reports from Pioneer this week are of a very encouraging character.

OTHER MAUI STOCKS.
Wailuku, Paia, Haiku and Olowalu have remained out of the trading during the week. On Tuesday Wailuku paid a dividend of $1.50 a share, the total being $45,000. The stock is not quoted. Haiku and Paia have remained at $145 asked, the only bids reported being at $120. Either of these stocks are good purchases, being as good investments as the figures indicated as any sugar properties in the Territory.

OTHER THAN MAUI.
Hawaiian Sugar, in which Maui people are interested, paid a dividend on Saturday of 30 cents a share, or $45,000. With the dividend off, this stock is $33.50 bid. McBryde is $4 bid and $4.25 asked, and in good demand.

Ewa has hung around $27.25 bid and $27.50 asked for a week, a total of 255 shares having sold at the latter figure. Oahu is now $26 bid and $26.50 asked, a total of 270 shares having sold during the week at $26.25. Wailua is $37.50 bid and $39.50 asked, 25 shares selling in small blocks at $90. Of Oloa, 670 shares have sold in small and fair sized lots, the price being $4 in all cases. The stock is now quoted at $3.875 bid and $4.125 asked, but $4 can be easily had for it. Honokaa seems to be slightly weaker, $10.875 being bid, although during the week 345 shares have sold at $11. There have been no extraordinary changes in any other stocks except Honolulu Brewery, a number of small blocks changing hands, first at $19 and later at $19.50. The cause of this advance was the receipt of information that the prohibition matter would likely be dropped at Washington for the present.

RUBBERMEN'S MEETING.

Maui will, as usual, take the lead in the convention of rubber growers to be held in this city next Monday. The most definite information in regard to Hawaiian rubber will be expected from that island, and that island's specimens will be the most interesting shown. Besides the Maui men there will be delegates from Oahu, Hawaii and probably Kauai.

Deserving Charity

Father's Life Ebbs Away As Christmas Cheer Comes.

(From Los Angeles Times.)

An echo from the Christmas feast, which has a heart tug in it, came to notice yesterday. A young woman stenographer at the Union Oil Company's office learned, quite by chance, that Wilbur Lemmon, aged 13 years, one of the office boys, together with a manly little brother, the sole support of an invalid father, a refined mother and two smaller children.

News of the little chaps' pluck and of the family's circumstances was circulated among the office employees. When the young woman took a Christmas petition among them, the response was instant and generous.

That afternoon Wilbur Lemmon was the most surprised boy in the city when he was called into the office and presented with a bank certificate for over $80, an envelope containing two $5 gold pieces for the family's immediate needs, and several packages containing articles which would give both pleasure and comfort to each member of the home. In addition to the money given by the employees, one of the men in the office secured a donation of $10 from a benevolent society of which he was a member.

With his boyish heart overflowing with happiness, Wilbur hastened home in high spirits, only to find that his father was at death's door. It was in vain that the little fellow sought to make his father understand their good fortune. Death was too pitifully near. A few minutes later and Lemmon had passed within the valley of the shadow.

He had just died when one of the chief clerks from the oil company's office arrived with two little girls who are members of an East Side Sunday-school which he teaches. They came with many pleasant little gifts, to wish the family a happy Christmas, but arrived instead to offer consolation in the face of deep sorrow.

The money contributed for Christmas cheer had to be applied on the funeral expenses. Tuesday morning Wilbur reported for work as usual, but when it was learned that his father was to be buried that afternoon, he was, of course, sent home for the day. The family resides at No. 420 East Thirty-first street, Los Angeles.

Ed.—The Mr. Lemmon referred to above was formerly a school teacher on Maui and was well known throughout the islands.

Joaquin Garcia Goes to Coast.

Owing to the long continued ill health of his wife, Joaquin Garcia, together with Mrs. Garcia, leaves on the next Mauna Kea, for an extended trip to the mainland. They intend to go direct from Honolulu to Victoria and Vancouver, and thence down the coast to San Francisco. They will spend about two months on the Pacific Coast, after which Mr. Garcia's mother will join him, and they will go east to Chicago and New York, where they will combine business with pleasure, and make some extensive purchases for the Maui Dry Goods Co. The length of time the Garcia's will be away will depend entirely on Mrs. Garcia's health. Mr. Garcia expects to spend a very pleasant time on the Coast, and will come back rejuvenated, and ready to take up the strenuous life again.

Thrilling Adventure

Peculiar Accident at San Francisco Almost Fatal.

A sudden backward start of a big touring car on the lower deck of the ferry boat Piedmont carried Mrs. Herbert Stockton, wife of an automobile dealer of San Jose, into the bay recently at the San Francisco ferry slip. Walter J. Seaborn, law student of the University of California, saved her life as she was making a vain struggle against death in the cold water.

Miss Edna Bushnell, a student of the San Jose normal and the second occupant of the machine, vaulted clear of the falling machine to the edge of the deck. Herbert Stockton, who had been cranking the machine, leaped into the water to save his wife and narrowly escaped drowning.

Hundreds of passengers crowded the decks and witnessed the plunge of the automobile. The guard chain of the boat snapped as a string and Mrs. Stockton was struggling in the midst of floating cushions and wreckage so quickly that onlookers stood paralyzed with horror. Ropes, lifelines and life preservers were quickly thrown into the water, but Mrs. Stockton's heavy clothes weighted her down, and being unable to swim, floundered, gasping in terror, in the turbid waters.

The first one to reach her side was her husband, who threw off his coat and dived to her rescue when the machine backed swiftly away from him and her cry of alarm dispelled his surprise.

Stockton is a strong swimmer, but the swell from the boat's mooring and the waves buffeted and exhausted him before he was able to reach her side. He clung to a floating cushion from the sunken machine and was picked up by the ferry boat's lifeboat.

Seaborn was near the machine when it suddenly backed into the bay and floated for a few seconds, only to sink quickly from sight.

Despite the fact he was enveloped in a heavy overcoat and a motor-cycle costume Seaborn jumped overboard after unsuccessfully trying to dive himself of his overcoat and heavy gauntlets buckled at the wrists. The gloves he pulled off in the water.

When Seaborn reached Mrs. Stockton's floating hat it was to find that it had been torn from her head and she was not in sight. Doctor G. J. Rheinhardt of the University of California shouted to Seaborn that Mrs. Stockton was probably under the edge of the ferry boat. By treading water Seaborn saw her hand disappearing under the water and he dove for the spot.

Mrs. Stockton was fast losing consciousness when he grasped her in his arms and struggled to the surface.

A heavy hawser was unslung and dropped over the side, and a cheer from the passengers when Seaborn kept the exhausted form of Mrs. Stockton tightly held with one arm while with the other he grasped the hawser was quickly turned to a cry of alarm when the hawser suddenly slipped loose, plunging victim and rescuer from sight. Seaborn maintained his grip on the drowning woman and clutched at a heavy rope when he again rose. He raised Mrs. Stockton's head out of the water this time and held her. The lifeboats picked them

That Ship Subsidy.

THE only real argument that has been put forth in support of a subsidy for American ships—and it is a most important one, if true—is that all foreign lines are subsidized, and that American lines cannot compete successfully, unless they are also subsidized. In the case of the Pacific Mail Company,—the greatest calamity howler,—what do we find?

We find steamers running between San Francisco and the Orient, carrying every ton of freight their capacity will allow, and at a higher rate per ton than any line going to the Far East either from Europe or Australia. Very often the ships are crowded with passengers, far in excess of their accommodations.

The fare from San Francisco to the Orient is higher than from England which trip takes almost twice as long, higher than from Australia, which is a much greater distance, and higher than from almost any point in Europe.

The Pacific Mail employs cheap coolie labor on its ships, have practically no harbor dues to pay, and ships its supplies in ports that are as cheap, if not cheaper, than any other in the world. The English and German lines running to the Orient employ white labor entirely, have large dues to pay in the Suez Canal, also numerous harbor dues, yet despite these many handicaps, are making money.

Some of the ships belonging to the Pacific Mail are a disgrace to any flag. The first class accommodations are inferior to the second class on the German boats.

The officers on the Pacific Mail boats are so hedged about by rules and regulations that they dare not attempt making things agreeable for the passengers. In the old days no restrictions were placed on the ships' officers. The Pacific Mail is howling for a subsidy. A subsidy is not going to make their ships popular. The Japanese will eventually beat them out, and the Pacific Mail people have nobody to blame but themselves.

A gentleman who has travelled across the Pacific thirty-nine times, has the following to say regarding the Pacific Mail:

"The Japanese line would never have reached its present position but for the Pacific Mail's disregard of the favor of the traveling public and Huntington's lack of knowledge of the Japanese character and ability. When the Japanese first came into the field Huntington tied them up with his lines in such a way that competition was stifled and the Jap assured of the short end of the deal. He had every confidence in his ability to prevent the Japanese from making money, and expected them soon to tire of running at a loss, and quit.

"He did not know, however, that he was playing right into the hands of the Asiatics. The Japanese realized when they started their line that, by themselves, they could never win the confidence of the traveling public. As the partners, however, of the Pacific Mail company they were assured of some recognition and, at least, the overflow of travel from the old established line. With this as a starter they went to work to make their ships popular, and they did it largely through the European officers on their ships. They are now strong enough to go it alone. They are now clear of their Pacific Mail bargain, and if the Pacific Mail company does not wake up, the positions will be reversed, and it will be the Pacific Mail company that will get the overflow from the Japanese ships."

The Pacific Mail is simply the tail to the Southern Pacific kite, and a ship subsidy in this case would be putting money into the paw of that grasping corporation. If the government really wishes to promote the flying of the American flag on the merchant marine, and relieve the situation on the Pacific ocean, let it put on a line of government owned or government controlled steamers, and then the people, the shippers, the consumers, and not the railroads will be benefited.

The weekly edition of the Paradise of the Pacific seems to be improving with every issue. It is a genuine journalistic success, and no doubt will be read from cover to cover with much pleasure by its subscribers. Messrs. Henshall, Langton and McCarthy are producing a publication that will prove its worth as a promotion adjunct.

While the current edition of the MAUI NEWS is dated on Saturday as usual, we were obliged to print it one day earlier than usual. Our new press has just arrived from New York, and we need the extra time in order to take out the old machine, and install the new.

Object, Matrimony?

(By Ned Lattimer.)

WANTED: A home to call my own,
Small matter where it be,
So it harbors a companion
That is all the world to me.

My heart is faint with loneliness,
Must it be ever so?
That those who best know how to love
Love's blessings should not know.

Only a trifling wayside farm,
Or tiny city flat,
Cosy and warm with breath of love—
Holds life more joy than that?

Though friends are kind and family dear,
Unsatisfied I roam
Unseen in my heart is a sign
Reading: Wanted—A home.

Correspondence.

Wailuku, January 19, 1911.

EDITOR MAUI NEWS:

Will you kindly allow me space so that I may present an outline of the County school system as contemplated by a few "kickers" from Maui? So much has been said in praise of the present school system that to hint at another is sacrilegious, and when the hint comes from one who knows something of said system the further cry is raised: "He has an ax to grind." But study the following fairly and see whether or not the last cry is justified.

The school system for each county to be under the general supervision of the Board of Supervisors, the said Board to appoint a superintendent of schools who shall be the executive officer of the Board. If possible the superintendent should be acceptable to the Governor so that he may be appointed member of the Board of Education from the county he is superintendent of; but this is secondary.

The superintendent appoints teachers and fixes their salaries, subject to approval by the Board Supervisors.

Twenty five per cent of the receipts from taxes of each County, together with the school tax, to be deposited in each County Treasury as a special deposit fund to be used for school purposes only, thus insuring the school system of each County ample funds.

The Territorial Board of Education shall have the direct control of schools which are Territorial in their nature such as the Waialeale Industrial school, the Reformatory school for girls, the Lahaionalua Seminary, the Normal school and possibly the Honolulu High school; it will have the supervision of the course of study and the grading of teachers.

The above plan decentralizes the school system as it exists at the present time, and places the responsibility of the work where it belongs—on the representatives of the people. There is nothing new introduced in the working of the system; some power is taken away from the Board of Education in Honolulu and scattered in the various county seats—where it belongs.

Ten years ago when the idea of County government was being agitated, there was a howl that it will be a "failure." Five years ago where county government was inaugurated, there were many head shakings, and yet time has shown that county government has been a success even with the many drawbacks encountered. The same thing will be said of the attempt to get the control of the schools from the Territory to the Counties. But the attempt will be successful sometime, if not this session it will by some time in the future, for the principle underlying the idea—direct control by the representatives of the people—is correct.

Very respectfully,
S. KELIHOLO.

The Raising of the Battleship Maine.

The war department is receiving reports from those engaged in raising the sunken battleship Maine from Havana harbor, which, according to the engineers in charge, suggest that the disaster was due to an internal explosion, and not to an external agency.

In the mud and silt in which the hull of the battleship lies buried have been found great quantities of coal and the bones of some of the crew of the ship who were killed when the ship sank.

Engineer officers now advance the theory that the coal and the bodies of the men were blown from the battleship by an explosion in one of the air tight compartments in which was stored powder or other explosives. They do not think the coal could have been blown from the hull of the battleship by an outside explosion.

The Spanish authorities have contended always that the sinking of the Maine was the result of an internal explosion.

With the present progress of the work the hull of the Maine should be raised by April. The controversy over the cause of its sinking may then be settled by definite knowledge. There is some fear that the hull may break in two while being raised.

They have secured the old baseball grounds, and will erect their big tent, and be ready for the first performance on Tuesday evening. A matinee performance will be given Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. See the "ad" on another page for particulars.

A PROPOSAL.

It Occurred at the Moment the Lady Wished It.

By JANE PINCKNEY BURNETT.
(Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.)

Dr. Pitman was an excellent matrimonial catch in every way except in that of fortune. Socially he stood as high as any one can stand in American society. His manners were refined. He was not only conversant with conventional customs, but knew the social rights of every one. In his relations to others it would have been impossible for him to commit a social error. People whose education or instincts were not of the highest type would watch him at a dinner party or any social function and follow his lead. They knew he would not eat meat with his fish fork.

There was an exact counterpart of the doctor among the women of the place where he lived and practiced. A young widow, Mrs. Gwendolin Whiting, was never known in the whole twenty-four years of her life to offend against good taste. She had the faculty when "out" not only of keeping off such men as were considered least desirable attendants without seeming to dismiss them, but of attracting and retaining those who were from a social point of view particularly desirable. She had never known any other condition than that of wealth, consequently did not know the value of money. In the choice of a second husband, therefore, it was no object to her.

"HOW LOVELY OF YOU!"

One evening Dr. Pitman was about to keep an engagement with one of his patients, a maiden lady and a hypochondriac whose fancy for medicines was a source of considerable revenue to him. Just as he was leaving the house there came a ring at the telephone.

"Is Dr. Pitman at home?"

"This is Dr. Pitman."

"Please, sir, Mrs. Whiting is not feeling very well this evening and would like you to call."

"Say to Mrs. Whiting, please, that I am about to visit another patient and will call later in the evening."

There was a pause, broken by the maid:

"Please, sir, Mrs. Whiting is feeling rather strange and would like you to come at once."

"Very well; I will be there directly."

The doctor made the reply after consideration. Each woman expected a preference, and it was a question which of the two he should prefer. The hypochondriac was good for at least his office rent, while the widow was ordinarily in excellent health. But the widow was attractive, and listening to the aches and pains of the hypochondriac was a bore. This was the reason he decided to go first to the widow.

He found her sitting or rather half reclining on a lounge beautifully and becomingly dressed. Mrs. Whiting was born with a fine sense of harmony in color and had chosen a shade for the lamp on the little table beside her with a hue contrasting with her costume. Being a light shade of rose, it also gave her complexion the warmth it needed.

Leaving his satchel in the hall, Dr. Pitman entered the room with the encouraging smile that was his invariable preliminary tonic in visiting a patient. The widow gave a feeble return of the smile and extended her hand, displaying to the elbow a shapely arm. The doctor clasped the hand lightly in his own and placed the tips of the fingers of his other hand on the wrist.

"Slightly above normal," he said, "but no fever."

The physician then gave the patient a professional look with his large handsome eyes, which meant "tell me your symptoms." It was not usual with him to ask questions of his lady patients. He left them to give their information themselves.

"I was sitting in the library after dinner," said Mrs. Whiting, "when a singular feeling—well, it is best described as loneliness—came over me. I felt the need of a stimulant and drank a glass of wine. It did me no good. Indeed, the requirement was not a physical but a mental or rather spiritual one. I have never suffered any symptoms of melancholia, but I should fancy my feelings were of this order."

"An unusual action of the heart?" asked the doctor, his finger tips still on the lady's wrist.

"Yes; a slight fluttering."
"Painful?"
"No."
"Disagreeable in any respect?"
"Rather pleasant."
"It?" said the doctor, withdrawing his touch upon the wrist, and, bending down, with an apologetic "Excuse me," placing his ear over the heart. He listened for several minutes, then, rising, looked at the patient with an expression that was more than professionally sympathetic.

"I suppose," he said, "that there is no one very near or dear to you—that there is a void which needs to be filled. It is this that is affecting the action of your heart."

"I am sure your diagnosis is right, doctor. I am lonely. I have the means to acquire anything I wish except love."

This statement commended the lady especially to the doctor's delicate sensibilities. Another woman might have put it bluntly. "One of the advantages a man, especially a poor man, may derive from marrying me is my wealth."

Instead of this harsh announcement Miss Whiting had said, "I have the means to acquire anything I wish except love." And another man would have made bold to interpret this as it was intended. Not so the refined Pitman. He ignored it, except in a professional sense.

"I think, dear Mrs. Whiting," he said encouragingly, "that what you need is not drugs. I found a slightly accelerated cardiac action when I listened to your heart beat just now and could give you a sedative, but I doubt that it is necessary. You need rather to mingle more with the world. We medical men are now inclined to build up the whole system rather than an affected part, the part deriving benefit from the whole and being thus strengthened to throw off the trouble. I wish you to cultivate such associations as are pleasing to you. If there is any one whom you wish to be with you a great deal yield to the longing. I need not say that in the case of so charming a woman—"

"Oh, doctor, how good of you!"

"Have you any engagement for tomorrow afternoon?"

"No."

"The first dose I shall give you is fresh air. I will call at 3 and take you to drive. Have you seen 'Lohengrin' with Mme. — as Elsa?"

"I have not, doctor."

"I will secure seats for Wednesday night, and I wish you to continue my treatment in this respect during the season. Are you fond of flowers?"

"Passionately."

"I will leave an order at the pharmacy to have the flower shop— for some roses to be sent in the morning."

"How lovely of you!"

"And now I must leave you to see a patient I was about to visit when your call came."

"A lady?"

"Yes; an elderly lady, a hypochondriac who tries me dreadfully. I shall prescribe for her, as in your case, not drugs, but with a view to build up her system."

"What do you mean by that, doctor?" anxiously.

"I shall send her off on a long trip."

Dr. Pitman kept his engagements with Mrs. Whiting—at least as soon as he had seen his hypochondriac patient safely off on an ocean liner, with a medicine chest made up by himself to suit her special case—sent her flowers regularly, and each day his manner became more endearing. He was gradually leading up to a proposal that the widow knew was coming, but between two persons of such delicate sensibilities must be made as a male angel would make it to a female angel, provided there were marriage and giving in marriage in heaven.

It came one October evening when Mrs. Whiting felt that she needed Dr. Pitman's professional services or Dr. Pitman, as the case may be. She was sitting before a fire of real blazing logs—Mrs. Whiting scorned to use any of those devices for imitating an open wood fire—dressed in a tea gown that was extremely becoming to her. She had been putting off Dr. Pitman's proposal until she felt exactly in the mood for it. Dr. Pitman, with exquisite tact, aware that she desired to lead in the matter, left everything to her. He was no stupid blunderer to step in at the wrong moment and was prepared to speak when he received the signal. Nor was it necessary for the widow to make that signal inordinately plain. The doctor could breathe it in with the perfumed air that surrounded her lovely person.

Dr. Pitman had come in early and was dressed for the evening when he received a telephone call from Mrs. Whiting's maid that her mistress would like to have him come over if he could do so at once. In ten minutes he was with her, though he had stopped on the way for flowers. His patient was discernible only by the firelight. Without rising she gave him her hand, and when she looked up at him there was that in her eyes which told him the hour had come. He retained her hand for a moment, returning her glance, while with his other hand he tossed the flowers he had brought into her lap.

"You are looking so well, so charming, this evening," he said, "that I am sure you have not sent for me to minister to your health, and I am pleased that it is so, for I have something to say to you that I have been putting off from day to day. But before I say it promise me, my dear Mrs. Whiting, that whatever it be it shall not break up that delightful friendship which has come to be a necessity with me."

"I promise," she said in a low tone.

Then, bending low over her, he said: "My whole being is dissolving in an all absorbing love for you. May I dare hope that you will be my wife?"

SURPRISED. THE MINISTER.

The Nice Present Sent Him by One of His Parishioners.

As an office boy Master George, employed in a certain downtown place of business, is the dynamic essence of effervescent energy and the exemplification of cheerful obedience.

But there may be such a thing as too great promptitude. A few days ago George's employer emerged from his office and, seeing the office boy, requested him to take a package which he would find on his employer's desk and deliver it to the Rev. Dr. So-and-so of such and such street.

With a bound that would beat the starter's pistol easily George was into the office, out again with a large package under his arm and off to his destination. Now, Dr. So-and-so is the business man's pastor, and the package, which was plainly addressed, contained a handsome volume intended as a birthday remembrance. Late in the day, after the office boy had gone home, the employer was surprised to find the designated package still reposing on the desk. For a moment he thought hard; then, as cold beads of perspiration bedewed his brow he called in a clerk.

"John," he asked, with forced calmness, "did you get those supplies for my church party?"

"Long ago," said the clerk. "Left the package on your desk; bottle of rye, bottle of port, four decks of cards and a box of cigars."—Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

Alarmed Him.

In a churchyard an old man deep in thought sat on a flat tombstone. It had been raining, and all the trees looked fresh and green. A traveler passing by made a remark on the weather. "Grand morning."

"Yes," said the old man.

"Just the sort of weather to make things spring up," said the tramp.

"Hush, hush!" said the old man. "I've got three wives buried here."

Putting It Mildly.

A traveler tells of a trip on a jaunting car in Ireland where he had as a fellow passenger an ugly looking man whom he was not sorry to leave behind at an inn.

"That was a queer looking fellow, Pat," I remarked to the waggish driver as we proceeded on our way.

"Faith, yer honor, and he's as queer as he looks. He's a villain. He's done fifteen years for leaving his wife without visible means of support."

"Oh, get out, Pat! A man can't get fifteen years' penal servitude for leaving his wife without visible means of support."

"Shure, and can't he, sir?" said Pat, with a twinkle in his rogues' eyes.

"He did, though. And, bedad, isn't it leaving yer wife 'without visible means of support' when ye throw her out of a window on the third floor?"

The Man Who Stayed.

For one woman who dominates her husband in China there are nine of the approved oriental stripe of humility. Nevertheless Chinese humorous literature abounds in references to henpecked husbands. Here is one of them:

Ten henpecked husbands resolved to form a society to resist the imposition of their wives. The ten wives heard of the plan and while the meeting for organization was in progress entered the room in a body. Nine of the rebellious husbands fled, but the tenth one retained his place, apparently unmoved by the unexpected visitation.

The ten wives, after smiling contemptuously on the one man who remained, went back to their homes, well content with the success of their raid.

The nine husbands thereupon returned to their meeting, resolved to make the heroic tenth man the president of the society.

When they entered the room, however, to inform him of the honor it was found that he was dead. He had died of fright.

Nothing Doing.

A farmer engaged an eminent doctor to attend his sick wife. The doctor had an eye out for the main chance and asked the agriculturist if he had the money to pay for an operation.

"Sure," says the farmer, "and I'll pay you $100 if you cure her."

"I am not handling insurance as a side line," says the doctor, "and I do not take cases that way."

"Very well," says the farmer, "I'll pay you $100 if you cure her or $100 if you kill her." The doctor let it go at that.

The lady died, and the M. D. called for his fee. The farmer pulled out his roll and asked, "Did you kill her?"

"Certainly not," says the doctor.

"And there is a heap of circumstantial evidence that you didn't cure her," says the farmer, carefully replacing the wad next to his femur, "therefore, according to our agreement, I don't owe you anything."

What the Wrestlers, Boxers and Base Ball Artists Are Doing.

A match has been arranged between "Pacey" McFarland of Chicago and Freddie Welsh of Cardiff, Wales, lightweights, for a 20 round boxing contest in England on February 9, the boys to weigh 133 pounds at 2 o'clock on the day of the contest, according to announcement made by H. O. Messer, American representative for Hugh D. McIntosh.

A private telegram from Tom Jones, manager of Ad Wolgast, in Cadillac, Mich., to a friend in San Francisco says positively that the lightweight champion will fight George Meusic February 22. Physicians, says Jones, examined Wolgast's injured arm and assured the fighter that it would be in perfect condition at the time of the match.

Reginald D. Doherty, elder of the brothers of the English tennis team, died recently in London. He had been in ill health for some time. R. F. Doherty made his first appearance on American courts in the summer of 1902 with his brother and Doctor Pim, forming the British team in an unsuccessful attempt to lift the Davis international cup. The Doherty brothers won the doubles event, defeating Ward and Davis in four sets, but lost in the singles contest, and the cup stayed in America. Later R. F. Doherty met William A. Larned and was defeated in a four set match. The brothers, however, captured the American championship in doubles by defeating Ward and Davis in a hard match. The Doherty brothers returned the following year and made a clean sweep of the American tennis courts.

Frank Gotch, champion wrestler of the world, has turned that honor over to Yusef Mahmoud and announced he would back Mahmoud against Hackenschmidt for $20,000, part of which has been posted. The announcement was made from the ring in which Hackenschmidt and Jess Westergaard were preparing to wrestle by "Farmer" Burns, who stated that $1,000 had already been deposited by himself on behalf of Gotch, and that the remainder will be posted at any time the challenge is accepted. Mahmoud himself and his manager appeared in the ring and the Turk offered to wrestle Hackenschmidt on the spot for nothing or for any amount, for the 5,000 persons gathered to witness the Hackenschmidt-Westergaard match. Later Burns stated that Gotch was retiring from the mat because his finance opposed his continuing in the game. Burns stated that the recent challenge to Hackenschmidt was made in good faith, but that the objections of the young lady had led Gotch to reconsider the challenge, for which he had no apology.

Lahaina Notes.

A pleasant wedding took place in Holy Innocents' Church, last Saturday afternoon. Miss Emily Cason of Olowalu was united in marriage with Ernest L. Napaepae of Lahaina. Appropriate hymns were sung by the choir girls. After the ceremony a luau was served at the Napaepae residence.

During the last two weeks there have been several heavy showers in Lahaina, and the ground is saturated with moisture.

A motor boat owned by Satto was launched last week. She will be a valuable addition to the fishing fleet.

Body of Mormon Elder Recovered.

The body of Mr. Kirkman the Mormon Elder, who lost his life in Alelele gulch, was found on Sunday, the 15th; one arm was broken and the head was badly bruised but otherwise the face and body presented a most natural appearance without any signs of decomposition. This was rather surprising not only because the body had been in the water several days, but also because of the terrible plunge down the water-fall of about 250 feet. The steep pali over which the Alelele water drops is just 248 feet 6 inches by recent measurement.

Because of superstitious feeling it was difficult to persuade any Hawaiian in the vicinity of Kaupo or Kipahulu to search for the dead man in the gloomy depths at the bottom of the fall, but at last a part Tahitian undertook the gruesome task and a reward of $150 was presented him for several descents. The first time he discovered the mule floating on the surface and on Sunday he found the remains of the young man. It took from 10 o'clock in the morning to six in the afternoon to get the body out from among rocks of the stream and float it to the sea. It is a matter of congratulation that instead of being devoured by sharks that Kirkman received a Christian burial that same day at Kipahulu. When found, every stitch of clothing had been torn from the body by the force of the water. After securing the body the men endeavored to bring it up the cliff over which the dead man and his horse had plunged, but found that was impossible. They therefore let the body down over a second cliff, and carried it around the edge of the mountain to the open sea, where they finally succeeded in getting up the coast to Kipahulu. The lesson taught by the sad mishap is that a wire-bridge should be constructed by the authorities over this dangerous crossing.

Herbert Melton Ayres Received in London.

The following is by Mr. Ayres', great and good friend, Will Sabin, writing in the Paradise of the Pacific.

A letter from London from a former Honolulu writer now visiting that town recounts some strange experiences. It seems that, formerly a Londoner, on his arrival from the Sandwich Islands, don-derknow, he was welcomed to the old country with considerable of a banquet, Guildhall possibly being used for the purpose. Wine bottled in Glassware and corked in Cork, was served, and then Mr. Ayres was called upon to make a speech: "Gentlemen, aloha kako! Not having the tongue of a Hanawaki, nor the persistent eloquence of a Harry Murray I shall confine my few long remarks to what I have to say."

He was asked if this Hanawaki was a King of the Cannibal Islands. "No" said Ohule, "he's worse than that—he's a Supervisor."

Continuing, when so rudely interrupted, Herb said: "From the tip of that top from which Cap. Cook so ingloriously tumbled, yeleft the N. Pole, to the most extreme antithesis of the same, there's no spot on earth like Hawaii, 'specially Honolulu" (Loud Cheers) "and I want to tell you" (More Cheers) "that waikiki palama kalih maikai aole mauka mahope pemi pehea nuinui pilikia kapiolani paka moilili kakaako pau welakahaoo—"

Suddenly, amid bursts of applause the audience thought he was going mad, but, when he explained that he was talking Hawaiian, the policeman was sent out of the room and told to wait until called. This gave old baldy a new start.

"Hawaii's a great place," he said "and before I came away I promised H. Promotion Wood that I'd invite you all there. There's a reason! There are no beastly fogs in 'Lulu, nor have we any suffragettes. Why here in London a prominent man may walk to his death by daring to enter Parliament when a band of suffragettes is picketed about, while in dear, peaceful Honolulu the women are so tame that even a City Supervisor may try to talk politics without being hit over the head with a parasol. The ladies don't bother with politics. We've no fogs nor faunatics nor female furies. You can be absolutely happy in Hawaii if you never read the newspapers."
