Fruit Fly On Maui

This Is the Last Island to Be Infested With the Pest.

For some time reports have come in to the sheriff that the fruit fly was in different places on Maui, but on investigation, no sign of the pest could be found. Last Saturday morning, however, James Cornwell handed a bag of Chinese oranges to the sheriff, in which he claimed the fruit fly maggots would be found.

On opening the oranges they were found to be alive inside, and on close examination they appeared to have all the identifying marks of the embryo fruit fly. The fruit was shown to the different members of the Chamber of Commerce committee, and it was decided by the sheriff that the best thing to do was to send the samples to Honolulu to the experts in order that there might be no mistake made. In the meantime orders were issued and all the fruit in the orchard of Pia Cockett at Waikapu, where the supposed fruit fly was found, has been destroyed, and a close watch is being kept on all fruit in the vicinity, and just as soon as there are any signs elsewhere, the fruit will be destroyed also. Up to the present time, no word has been received from Honolulu, as to what has been the result of the examination of the fruit sent there.

The Latest In Sports

What the Wrestlers, Boxers and Base Ball Artists Are Doing.

Ad Wolgast, the champion of today, is too much of a business man to hazard his money in speculations. Ad doesn't care for the glare of the night life and you will rarely see him in the haunts where the sports are supposed to congregate. He has a penchant for diamonds, the bigger the better, and also spends much of his time in figuring out real estate deals, having bought considerable property in the southern part of the State. If there's any fighter of this time who knows the value of a dollar, Ad Wolgast is the man.

Battling Nelson, generally considered thrifty, has been labeled as one of the unluckiest investors among the fighters. The Dane has always listened with a kindly ear to real estate propositions and never more so than when it was a farm at stake. Stocks, mining and otherwise, have attracted his attention, and that is why he has less to show for his investments than one might expect. His buy of Hegewisch city property was a disappointment, he has a lot of stocks that will never bring what he paid for them and his farming purposes are said to have been less than fair business ventures. For all that, I doubt if there is a busier fighter in the game than Battling Nelson, for he can generally occupy himself with one thing or another.

One couldn't say that Jimmy Britt is a chap with any particular hobby, unless it is to dress in the latest fashion and to talk. And Jimmy, with his club life and his travels, is an interesting talker. He can tell a story and tell it well and wherever you find Jimmy Britt you will find an audience that is being entertained.

Terry McGovern used to be a great fellow to spend lots of time with his babies. Young Corbett, on the contrary, liked always to be up and doing. There was no greater gambler than the Denverite, which is why he came to the end with so little money. To this day, race track followers tell of the afternoon when Young Corbett lost $9000, all the money he had in the world, and never turned a hair.

John L. Sullivan liked to drink beer and hobnob with his friends in the barrooms, but it must be remembered that Sullivan was of a day and age in which that was the prime amusement for fistic champions.

Bob Fitzsimmons had one fad. Whenever there was an idle moment, Fitz could be found in some blacksmith shop and all over the country are souvenir horseshoes turned out by Ruby Robert.

James J. Corbett was a fancy dresser, but by way of recreation he was very much of a card player. Corbett, when in his prime as a ringster, never played for anything more than nominal stakes, but whist and the like whiled away many an hour for him.

Tom Sharkey had but one idea—get the money. That thought was his chief one all through life, and how successful he was is proved by the way he husbanded his coin. It was as much amusement for the sailor to save a dollar as would be for another fighter to toss away a hundred.

James J. Jeffries is of such recent origin that it is well understood how he hates crowds and the like.

The Free Sugar Bill

Intended to Be the Beginning of the End of Protection.

The bill for the removal of all duties on imported sugar, which has passed the House of Representatives might well be called a bill to promote the election of a Republican President, for it is a concrete illustration of what the Democrats mean when they avow the intention of sweeping every vestige of protection from our statutes.

The bill will not become a law until after the 4th of next March. Whether that or any similar bill will become law after that date will depend on whether our people elect a stalwart Republican like President Taft or a free-trade Democrat like Champ Clark, Woodrow Wilson or Governor Harmon.

Whether the bill will pass the Senate is uncertain. It depends on the attitude of such Senators as Works, who is not known to have any views of his own on the tariff, but is associated with other nambypambys who profess to be Republicans but who usually join with the Democrats in assaults on the fundamental Republican doctrine.

In the meantime those interested in beet-sugar culture are organizing to resist the threatened destruction of their industry, but they may as well understand that they will have no influence if they do not avow themselves equally ready to oppose the destruction of other industries. The consumption of sugar by the average family is about 300 pounds a year, and with the "saving" of 1½ cents per pound promised by Mr. Underwood, each family would "save" less than 1½ cents a day by free sugar.

But if our workmen and clerks take the bait and assist in destroying our beet-sugar industry, they should know without our telling them that a good many millions of farmers will vote to take the duty from products by the manufacture of which they live and reduce the wages which industry and commerce in this country can pay.

The sugar-beet industry is no more dangerous than all other American industries. If one is put on a free-trade basis, the rest will probably go there also. Instead of organizing to save the sugar industry the sugar-beet growers must organize to save protection to American industries—bar none that is worthy of protection.

And that means to send stalwart Republicans to Congress and not such wobblers as Senator Works, who is likely to get universal contempt by voting for protection to his own immediate constituents while voting to remove it from everybody else.

The danger to protection comes solely from the so-called insurgent Republicans. To elect one of them or any one in avowed sympathy with them is to vote for free trade and the European scale of wages.

Morris Keohokalole, left Honolulu for the coast, where he will attend the convention of the Longshoremen's Association.

Jeff appreciated nothing better than hunting, solitary if need be, but usually with some chosen companion. At Rowardennan and even at Moano Springs, when Jeffries was so much of a bear, you could get him started to talking of his hunting exploits any time you might desire. All that was needed was to introduce the subject.

The Refiners and Free Sugar.

THE testimony of an official of the Federal Sugar Refining Company of New York, given before the Senate Finance Committee, develops very clearly the single argument for a free sugar schedule, namely:

The sugar trust wants free sugar.

The witness admitted that the company which he represented "was paying for the free sugar propaganda and was a leading advocate of the measure."

The witness also "agreed with the Republican members that enactment of the bill would wipe out the entire domestic production of sugar."

This was an expert witness whose words are entitled to the highest degree of consideration, and, from the position he occupies, it is not likely that he forced his way in. The committee room and gave this testimony in spite of the protests of the committeemen.

Is there any one so simple as to believe that any consumer of sugar—using the term in its ultimate sense—is embarrassed by the present price of sugar, or would be perceptibly benefited by a reduction in the present price of sugar, or who gives the subject any consideration from the viewpoint of the present price of sugar, or who, merely as a consumer of sugar, lifts his finger to obtain a free sugar schedule?

Consumers, merely as consumers, are not even interested in the subject. It is the producers, the refiners and the marketers of sugar who have exerted influence on this subject one way or the other. In this connection arises the question of who should be permitted to exert the determining influence—the thousands of American farmers producing sugar beets or the sugar trust refining imported cane sugar?

The official of the Federal Sugar Refining Company having shown where the sugar trust stands on this subject, it will not be very difficult to demonstrate that the entire country, minus the trust, stands on the other side.

Some of the newspapers both on the mainland and in the islands here which have been so set against Roosevelt in his endeavor to secure the nomination by the republican convention, for president, are beginning to pull in their horns. The more tin can abuse they have hurled at him, the more they will have to hedge. Everyone has a right to their preference for a presidential candidate, but we question the right of some of embryo editors hurling all the invective at their command at a candidate, as has been the case in many instances here, because Roosevelt dared come out and seek the nomination, especially when they would not dare open their mouths if they stood face to face with him in the open. Taft, himself does not wish this kind of a campaign, but then Taft is a big man, while some of his faithful newspaper writers are so small they could pass through the eye of a needle without the least discomfort either physically or mentally.

The fruit fly has infested Maui, and the worst of it is it probably has been here for a long time. Sheriff Crowell is going about the work of extermination in a businesslike manner, however. Sheriff Jarrett of Honolulu is enthusiastic over Crowell's methods, and says if he is left alone, he will surely keep the pest under control.

Roosevelt is coming along with a burst of speed which is typical of the man. If he succeeds in getting within striking distance of Taft before the convention actually starts to ballot. Well, it won't be very hard to guess who'll be the next president.

What kind of a celebration are we going to have when the electric juice is turned on. Surely we can stop long enough to take more than passing notice of this great municipal improvement.

The Maui Publishing Co., has just received direct from the coast the most complete line of up-to-date stationery ever shown on Maui.

The Comforter.

By E. L. Wilcox in the Crossroads.

HIGH on the shore of time's sea,
A human wreck was cast in gasping fear.
Not blindly had he sailed his course, nor drunk
With overweening pride of strength or skill.
He knew the hissing, panting waters' surge.
The rocks and shoals were listed on his chart.
But all the senseless agencies of fate
Had laughed and mocked his plans to nothingness.
Then came a motley crowd to view the scene.
One bloodless parody of man complained
Because the wreck was left before his eyes.
One read a sermon on the fear of hell.
Another neighbor, blessed with bulging purse,
All soft and oily with the fat of earth,
With gesture shrewdly timed to bring applause,
Tossed him a coin and knew his duty done.
But one there was who paused and sadly gazed.
A man, a merely human man was this.
No golden treasures jangled in his purse.
No store of cold advice was in his heart.
He grasped the stranger firmly by the arm,
And led him far away from curious eyes.
He'd stumbled, fallen, risen, walked again,
Lost, won and suffered, and could understand.

Mysterious Disappearance.

Last Monday evening about 7 o'clock, an old Portuguese Joe Fernandez, living in Kula bid his wife goodbye and left the house. His wife thought nothing of it, as she thought he was going to visit his grandchildren, but since that time nothing has been seen or heard of him. The sheriff was notified on Wednesday, and he has been searching with a posse of men ever since. Fernandez is about 90 years old, but very active for his age, and it is thought he may have wandered far. His wife, to whom he has been married about ten years, is only about 30.

Trained Rats.

Graham and his trained rats will be at the Paia Orpheum tonight. This is a great show. Graham is very entertaining himself and he has conveyed to the rats the art of entertaining also. This is probably the only troupe of trained rats in existence, and Mr. Graham says the work of training the little rodents has become a genuine pleasure. While out one night recently with a party of friends Mr. Graham made a sudden dash along the street. He had seen a rare specimen of rat, and had endeavored to get a closer view. He has become a genuine connoisseur on rats, and he gives a good show.

Butler Comes to Maui.

Mr. Butler will sing on Sunday at the Paia Union Church. His work as a singer with Mr. Ostrom seven years is remembered with pleasure by all those who heard him. He has had excellent write-ups in the Honolulu papers, and his work there was considered a success. He comes to Maui for special solo work in connection with the regular services in the Paia Union Church in the morning. In the evening he will sing at the Wailuku Union Church. His work will consist of three or four solos. At Paia the acting pastor will preach a short sermon. At Wailuku in the evening Colonel George French, who is no stranger in this Territory, will address the congregation. Colonel French has preached on Maui before. He always draws large audiences. Last Sunday he spoke at the First Methodist Church in Honolulu in the morning, and at Central Union Church in the evening. The Maui public is cordially invited to hear these earnest workers.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Fourth officer of Titanic who had been in charge of one of the boats stated yesterday that when the iceberg was struck a vessel was seen five miles away but paid no attention to distress signals. Ismay's wireless message to the steamer Cedric, asking that vessel to come alongside and take off the crew and themselves so they might avoid investigation, was read; Ismay had previously denied having sent such a message. Vice-President Franklin of the International Mercantile Marine testified to his having suppressed the real facts in the case of the disaster so as to avoid alarming the nation. A Hunt For a Will

By JOEL R. WITHERS

Hearing that there would be an auction sale of furniture in a dwelling house the owner of which had recently died and that among the lot were some rare old pieces, I determined to attend the sale.

Among those present was a girl who watched the proceedings with an interest very different from the rest. She attracted me so far that I forgot the rarities in her. It seemed to me that she was waiting and watching for some particular thing to be put up for sale.

Some one made a beginning by offering $20. The girl I have mentioned bid twenty-two. Another bid of twenty-five followed. A number of persons seemed to want the desk, and it was run up to a hundred dollars, when the girl ceased to bid.

I had been saving in a small way and had $300 in bank. I determined to bid as high as what I thought the desk would bring in case I wished to sell it again and offered $110.

Turning to the girl who had been so interested in it, I told her that I didn't need it and if at any time she wished to possess it and had the means to pay for it I would be happy to sell it to her for what I had paid.

As soon as I got the desk I opened every drawer, searched every pigeon hole, rammied my hand in every receptacle it possessed. It had evidently been thoroughly cleaned out, for I could not find a scrap of paper.

"Oh," I said, "you are looking for a secret drawer."

"I am." At this I joined my efforts to hers, but without avail. I not only pressed with my thumb, but with a little hammer, tapping continuously for half an hour. Nothing came of it. Then I invited the girl to tell me what she was looking for.

I would have knocked the desk to pieces, but could not afford to lose the money I had put into it, and the girl had no means of her own to pay for it.

A month passed, during which I thought a good deal of the matter and tried to locate a space capable of holding a secret drawer, but I could not tell with certainty without taking the desk apart.

Then an idea occurred to me. Among my odds and ends was a pocket compass. I took it to the desk and held it near where a drawer would likely be if at all.

There is a sequel to this story, but the subject matter of that is a love affair.

TRIED TO BE OBLIGING.

The Old Gentleman Did His Best to Make the Case Quite Clear.

A dear old gentleman, who visited New York recently, has a habit of taking things literally, and is so kind hearted that he is always ready to fall in with the wishes of other people, even at trouble or inconvenience to himself.

"But, dear me, what!" said the astonished coal dealer, as soon as he saw the girl.

"I SAW A SIGN YOU HAD PUT OUT."

could get a chance to say something, "why, what is the meaning of all this? I haven't proposed to send coal to you up in Warren county."

"No, sir," replied the old gentleman, rising from his chair, "but when I'm asked a question, I always answer it, if I can."

"I was not aware that I had put a question to you," responded the coal dealer, rather impatiently.

"Well, not directly, perhaps," answered the old gentleman, turning to leave, "but as I was passing by, on my way downtown, I saw a sign you had put out, asking, 'Why don't you buy your coal from us?'"

And he went out, leaving the coal dealer amazed and speechless.

Meant What She Said.

A Columbia professor rebuked the hidebound grammarian at a studio tea in New York with a story.

"A lady," he said, "had a rather dissipated husband, and one evening she said to a friend:

"I wish I knew where George was!"

"The friend, a professor's wife, said simply:

"I presume, dear, you mean you wish you knew where he is?"

"No, I don't," said the lady. "I know where he is. He is upstairs in bed with bloodshot eyes and a terrific headache. I want to know where he was!"

—Washington Star.

He Rattled Dickens.

When Charles Dickens was in Washington he met one morning on the steps of the capitol a young congressman from Tennessee whom the great novelist had offended by his boorishness.

"Oh," said the Tennesseean, "I didn't know you had your daughter with you."

"Oh," said the imperturbable Tennesseean, "you write novels, do you? Don't you consider that a rather trifling occupation for a grownup man?"

Finally Sherman sent a note to the group which read, "If that fellow who thinks he is making a speech is interfering with one of Bob Taylor's stories I shall call him to order."—Washington Star.

Her Advice

By SARAH J. TUCKER

Two farms lay side by side, the one belonging to old Charnley, the other to young Peterson. Peterson had inherited his farm with a debt on it and had no money with which to stock or work it.

One morning in April Albert Peterson was plowing in Charnley's field. The trees were just taking on that delicate shade of pale green which is so beautiful while the air was balmy with the first warm breeze coming up from the south.

"Guess who I am?" "No guessing is required. Your voice gives you away. You are Ethel Charnley."

The clasp was loosened. He turned and on the other side of the fence saw a girl of nineteen.

"You look as if you had lost your best friend," she said. "What's the matter?"

"Oh, I was thinking how lovely the country is, and I've got to leave it in the fall for the city. I have no money to work my farm, and I don't propose to work for other people.

"Do you know why it doesn't pay?"

"No; do you?"

"I've been reading in a farmer's journal that it could be made to pay if practiced scientifically. They say a few acres worked on scientific principles is far better than a great many worked in the old-fashioned, blundering way.

"I never thought of that," said Albert meditatively. But presently he added:

"To obtain money to pay my expenses while studying I'd have to sell my farm, and when I got it all learned I wouldn't have a farm to work."

There was a short silence, which the girl broke:

"Suppose you get the education and leave the rest to—well, to your own endeavors afterward. You'll be supplied with a capital better than a farm, for a farm is no use if you don't know how to make it pay."

"Well, Miss Longhead, what else do you recommend?"

"After I'd got the education it seems to me I would take a position for awhile in the service of some of those men in the city who handle farm produce. I don't see much use of learning how to get good crops if you don't know how to get paying prices for them."

Albert looked at her in surprise. "Where did you pick up all that?" he asked.

"I read a great deal. There's a lot in our country papers now we used not to get. Then I think about what I read. It has shown me that our old-fashioned ways of farming are passing out."

"Farming is going to be like manufacturing. It is manufacturing in a sense. We mix chemicals with the ground and manufacture crops. The manufacturers of goods know as much about the business of selling as of making them. Why shouldn't it be the same with the farmer?"

Albert gaped at this slender girl and said:

"Whoever would think that a young woman, who couldn't guide this plow once across the field, would stand there telling me, a strong man, what to do? I'll not only go to college in the fall, but I'll write at once for bulletins announcing their courses of study and all that and nights when I'm not at work I'll be making my preparations."

Five years from that time Albert Peterson returned from his college and his business training.

He stopped at the Charnley farm and, seeing a young woman directing some field hands preparing the soil for planting, said:

"I'll give you some points on that." And he proceeded to lecture them for half an hour while they listened eagerly.

"Is that you, Bert?" asked the woman.

"Yes, I've finished what you advised one spring morning five years ago."

"Well, I'm glad to see you. Come into the house."

While Peterson had been preparing himself for a life work time had been preparing a field of labor for him. Old Charnley had died and left his property to his daughter. She had the farm, Peterson the knowledge. So they made a match, and today a small part of the Charnley farm is paying far more than the whole paid under the old system of farming.

The owners look forward to the day when they will work all their land and make a small fortune every year.

Luau at Camp One.

The best luau ever given on Maui sounds pretty good, but that is what everyone says of the one last Saturday evening. Those in charge of the affair surely know how to do things, and they may well feel proud of their efforts on this occasion.

Messrs Keanu and Rahe were the committee in charge, and the results of their work was good to look upon. The arrangements, the edibles, the music, the dancing, everything was perfect, and everyone had a good time.

Dancing began about 9 o'clock, and continued into the wee sma hours, and might have been going yet, had the music boys not fagged out. J. B. Thompson acted as floor manager, and saw to it that everyone was provided with a partner.

Mrs. Jarley's Wax Work.

Everyone has read of Mrs. Jarley's Wax Work, as told by Charles Dickens in the "Old Curiosity Shop." The people of Maui will soon have an opportunity of seeing an exhibition of Mrs. Jarley's handiwork, as a number of the Wailuku people are now rehearsing, and propose to put on exhibition, "The genuine and only Jarley wax figures."

The production of these figures will be something entirely out of the ordinary and should be intensely interesting. The exhibition will be given in the Town Hall, Friday evening, May 10th.

William E. Foster Dies.

William E. Foster, superintendent of the Kula sanitarium, died Friday morning of tuberculosis. Mr. Foster has long been ailing from this dread disease, and about a year ago went to the sanitarium in an effort to gain renewed health. Before going to the sanitarium he was employed by the Maui Agricultural company. He also superintended the building of the Fred Baldwin Memorial Home at Paia. Mrs. Foster is the district nurse at the sanitarium.

Sheriff Bill Jarrett, of Honolulu, stopped off one day last week. Sheriff Crowell took him in tow, and showed him how a town should be run. Bill says he learned something. He went back to Honolulu Saturday night.

An exceptionally large mail was brought over by the Mikahala this week. In coming over the pali between Lahaina and Wailuku the horses were unable to pull the load up the hills, and it was necessary to unload part of the mail at each hill and then make two trips to the top. An auto was sent out and brought the up country mail in time for the two o'clock train, but the Wailuku mail did not arrive till almost four o'clock.

In the name of the mother of the minister of the Wailuku Union Church two large marble tablets will be placed in the vestibule of the new church commemorating the work of the early Maui missionaries. Mr. Dodge's mother died the year after he graduated from Amherst College. She was always deeply interested in the work of missions. In her name a friend of the Wailuku Union Church has given the money for these two tablets, which will to a large extent complete the memorials in the edifice to the early missionaries on this island.

Power of Attorney.

I have this day appointed Mrs. R. B. Whitehead my attorney in fact during my absence from the Territory, with full power to act for me in any matter that may come up during said absence.

California Farms.

Capt. Tullett, the popular captain of the Mikahala, returned to his ship last week, after a two months trip to the coast. Captain Tullett is enthusiastic over a farm which he bought while away, and if the glowing reports which he brings back with him, are all true, he has every reason to be pleased.

When you can buy property, with running water, electric lights, and other modern improvements, in the buildings, and the land all planted with bearing fruit trees, for $120 an acre, as he has, then homesteading in Hawaii is a joke. However, the captain, has bought his farm, his family are living on it, and are perfectly satisfied to stay in California. The captain expects to join them, after he puts in a few more months on the islands.

Homesteads in Hana.

A number of Hawaiians have made application to the land office for the Kakio government land. Tucker was over there this week looking into the matter, and he has promised to return in a few weeks with a surveyor. The probability is that he will cut this land up into lots from 20 to 100 acres in size, and give it to the applicants, at the upset price.

Milk-Fat, Tissue-Fat and Food-Fat

A series of nutrition experiments is being conducted on cattle at the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment Station. The animals have been kept over long periods—four years—on foods derived from a single plant—wheat, corn, oats or a mixture of these. This afforded an unusual opportunity for making a study of the influence of qualitatively unlike rations on the composition of the milk and the tissues under comparable conditions of environment. It will be observed that here is the old question of "breed versus feed." The problem at issue is not a new one, and the question of the influence of diet on milk secretion has a peculiar interest to the physician. It cannot be denied that foreign substances, such as certain drugs, may readily pass into the milk. That a surfeit of foreign fats will undoubtedly influence to some extent the character of the fats secreted in the milk is beyond question. But in most respects—and this is supported by the Wisconsin investigations referred to—"the character of the fats secreted is influenced more by individual metabolism than by the character of the food intake. This is particularly true when the fat content of the intake is not excessive and the content only that incident to normal feeding materials." In harmony, moreover, with the findings that the widely divergent rations had little direct or positive influence on the chemical constitution of the fats secreted in the milk were the facts noted in connection with the tissues examined. The variations that did occur were more of an individual nature. Judging by the Wisconsin studies, in connection with many others, the oils in corn, oats or wheat are so markedly different from those stored in the tissues of animals fed exclusively on these grains that very important processes must have been active in their deposition. Fat transportation cannot account for all; transformation must play an added role.—Journal of the American Medical Association.
