The Attractiveness of Newspapers

If there are men who, as Mr. Morley says, give ten minutes a day to newspapers, and for the rest trust to their friends' conversation, there are others, we fear a thousand times more numerous, whom the newspapers so possess that they can read nothing else. All other kinds of print seem to them a little insipid, and they are actually known to buy newspapers by the half-dozen, and keep all but one or two unread in order that in the evening, or whenever they have easy leisure, they may fill themselves full with their varied and, as they say, their living contents. We know at least three cultivated men with whom newspaper reading is a kind of dram-drinking, who are positively wretched if their newspapers are accidentally delayed, and who would, we have no sort of moral doubt, steal them if they could not obtain them in a legitimate method—an allegation, by the way, which as the Post Office and Messrs. W. Smith well know, is by no means jocular, except as regards the particular individuals. Of all species of portable property newspapers are the most frequently stolen, and they are not stolen for gain, but for a charm which to the thieves is positively irresistible.—Spectator.

"Could Not Be the Same Bag"

There are no stories so entertaining as those in which the tables are turned upon a mean person, an intriguer or a villain, such as is beloved of Adelphi audiences, however much they may hiss him. A miser lost a bag containing 100 guineas. He offered a reward of 10 for its recovery. A poor man found it. The miser refused to pay the man the reward because he said the bag contained 110 guineas when he lost it, and that the finder therefore must have helped himself to the odd 10. The case came before the Viceroy of the district. The bag was brought into court, and it bore unmistakable signs of having been sealed up long before the date of the loss. "Is this your seal?" he asked the miser. "It is, my lord." "And you swear to the bag?" "I do, my lord." "Break the seal," said the judge to the officer of the court. The seal was broken. "Count the money." The money was counted. "One hundred guineas," said the officer. "Very well, hand it over to the poor man who found it. The bag that was lost contained 110 guineas. This, therefore, could not have been the same; the finder must keep it until the rightful owner comes forward to claim it."

The Prince of Wales' Girth

The Prince of Wales is 5 feet 5 inches in height, and his average weight is thirteen stone, or 182 pounds, with a good sixteen ounces to each pound. Viewed from the standpoint of scientific physical proportions he should weigh 134 pounds or considerably less than ten stone. His 5 feet 5 inches would then be clothed in a correct amount of flesh and he could follow the hounds every day in the hunting season without experiencing the twinges of too much flesh.

The Prince has two hundred suits of clothes, and when he suddenly discovered a growing disinclination on the part of his trousers to meet around the royal waist, he was alarmed. He cast the trousers aside and the valet helped him into another pair. As they were built by the tailor on precisely the same lines as the other, they, too, failed to meet the requirements of the Prince's physique.

At the Empire Saloon, D. C. L., McBrayer and other topical drinks may be had. The new manager "Duke" McNichol is making many improvements for the convenience of his guests.

THAT HAWAIIAN CELEBRATION

We have been waiting to see what Mr. Dole's organ would have to say about the so-called observation of the Fourth of July, as a Hawaiian holiday, by the Hawaiian people, it affords us pleasure to say that for once the organ has wisely tempered its usual misrepresentation. We have been given to understand that the cost of the display was defrayed by foreigners, the Hawaiian office holders contributing less than ten percent of the cost of the parade, and they numbered less than ten percent of the persons in line. We have already had something to say about the compulsory attendance of school children and can now add that Hawaiians interested in the children are expressing themselves in unmeasured terms of censure of those who influenced the action of the teachers of the offending Seminary. It will be wiser not to make our Hawaiian educational institutions unpopular by seeking to compel a recognition of the present Government.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

The Advertiser is improving and we are bound to say, as impartial journalists, that it is never so sound as when it finds fault with the Star chamber practices. Its editorial in to-day's issue—"Education Bureau Meetings"—is one of the best we have seen in its columns.

Mrs. Mabel Loomis Todd of the Coronet's party, says that Kate Field remarked that her trip to Hawaii and her examination of its schools satisfied her that the public school system was injuring the people; but an Advertiser writer says the Commissioners of the Board of Education "have shown their capacity to keep the schools up to the mark and steadily progressing."

Mr. C. Supe, of Sault Ste Marie, Michigan, has written out his views on the question of annexation for the Advertiser, and every man in these islands interested in agriculture will say "Amen" after reading Mr. Supe's letter. The Advertiser's editorial, comment on its correspondents views is lame and halting, and lacks the heartiness of conviction as to its criticism.

Mr. Supe, on annexation, says one of the causes for the demand by this "funny little republic" for annexation to the United States, is "A probable desire of members of the present Government to be relieved of the heavy responsibilities resting upon them while in control of affairs." Right you are Mr. Supe. In the language of our sharpshooters Mr. Supe has scored a bulls-eye. In the language of the street gamin "the best government these islands ever had" has bitten off more than it can chew. The "best," etc. wishes to let go of the bear's paws, but does not know how to.

In his criticism of Mr. Supe's letter, the editor of the Advertiser deals out taffy to our Portuguese fellow citizens; but they know too well the hollowness of the friendship professed by Mr. Dole and his colleagues. The Portuguese do not forget Mr. Armstrong and the backing he received from Mr. Dole and his Government.

If State Government is desired its foundations must be broader Mr. Dole. An oligarchy dressed in the feathers of a Republic does not fool anybody. Let us have concord rather than discord.

* Lawyers ought to have their witnesses in readiness when they present their cases to a court. The actions of certain lawyers here are reprehensible and any rebukes to them are justifiable. A Judge ought never to be delayed on frivolous charges, and we think it is about time that the Judges show the Bar that the days of "funny business" have passed. Let the laws of the Republic be put into effect and justice administered. Then everything will be O. K. and vox populi stilled.

CORRESPONDENCE.

(We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions of correspondents. Our columns are open to every shade of opinion or party or grievance. Correspondence must not be libelous or indecent and must be accompanied by the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.)

ED. THE INDEPENDENT:—

Dear Sir:—One of our morning papers contains an interesting letter from Mr. C. Supe, Sault Ste Marie, Michigan, rehearsing some of the objections to the theory of annexing these islands to the United States. May I take the liberty of presenting a phase of this question, which said correspondent has overlooked?

The most serious obstacle (in my opinion) in the way of annexation is that the masses of the American people are skeptical about such annexation being the wish of the majority of voters in the Hawaiian Islands. Of course we Americans know that there is de facto Government in the islands, which the United States has recognized as the Republic of Hawaii, and every citizen of the United States will feel in honor bound to respect a government which his own country has recognized. But the de jure status of this Government is not quite so plain to Americans. In the United States the question, amongst citizens outside of official circles is, what do Hawaiians desire? Have they ever been allowed to express their views by an unrestricted ballot? If the vote of all Hawaiians should be taken, what kind of government would they choose? In the very nature of things Americans are most in sympathy with Republican forms of Government, and no doubt is entertained that such form is more conducive to the best interests of all classes of people, than a monarchy. But Americans are a liberty-loving people, and while our citizens believe in republics, they are not quite certain that this present Government was not forced on the people, instead of its being their deliberate choice. With us the wish of the poorest, humblest native is entitled to as much respect as that of the wealthiest capitalist. When the whole people shall express a desire to be annexed, then there will be a hearty response from the voters of the United States—not before—I do not pretend to say what is or what is not the will of your people, nor am I inclined or qualified to enter into the merits of the question. I simply state what I believe to be the sentiment of voters in the United States, who send men to Congress to represent their views, and make laws for the country.

So far as the contract laborer system is concerned, it would not necessarily be interfered with by annexation, as the United States could enact such special legislation as the needs of the islands might demand. But the ground on which Mr. Supe objects to the cancelling of the contract system is the very ground on which the American law is based. The law against contracting with foreign laborers was enacted to protect the interests of laborers already in the country. The aim was to increase the wages of the man who has to make his bread by the sweat of his brow. And an American would think that if annexation operated in the direction of increasing the wages of the employees on plantations, this would be a most cogent argument in its behalf. I confess my ignorance on all questions of political economy, but I truly cannot see the desirability of flooding a country with laborers until our production of labor renders labor worth almost nothing.

Regarding a Protectorate, is such necessary? The present Government of the islands has proved itself fully able to maintain itself. Life, liberty and property are as fully secured to a law-abiding person in Hawaiian Islands as in any place in the world. I know of no city in America where one feels more safe than on the streets of Honolulu. Why a protectorate? It goes without saying that our Government will always protect the Hawaiian islands against forcible possession by a foreign power. In the mean while, it should be remembered that America is a long distance away, and no cable communication. It is not possible for the people of the United States at large to thoroughly comprehend the actual status of matters here. They are waiting, having made some gross blunders already in their dealings with these islands, they are (and ought to be) exceedingly cautious in the future. When once Americans have it thoroughly demonstrated to them what the will of all the Hawaiians is then they will be able to act rationally as well as cheerfully.

I am yours truly,

AN AMERICAN.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:

The non-attendance of the Executive at the Fourth of July ball on the evening of the 3d instant, is the subject of much comment. The matter has given the local papers a subject to write on, and the community something to talk about.

The writer of an editorial in the Advertiser of the 6th, while deploring the fact of the non-representation of the Executive Council at that social function, leads its readers to believe that Mr. Dole and his Cabinet were too tired to attend. What made them tired, he does not state.

As far as Mr. Dole is concerned, the matter of attendance was optional with that gentleman, but it was his duty, in accordance with the rules of both official and social etiquette, to have informed the ball committee what his intentions were. (The Advertiser does not say that he did so.)

A new paragraph in the Advertiser of the 7th states that Mr. Cooper, the present Minister of Foreign Affairs, has said that "the ball was wholly unofficial, and the members of the Executive stood in the same position as private citizens." Oh, sweet simplicity! That an official of Mr. Cooper's supposed ability could make such an assertion is beyond comprehension. He evidently is not aware of the fact that the Minister of Foreign Affairs has social as well as official duties to perform, and that there are occasions (wholly unofficial) when social duty demands his attendance, whether he is tired or not.

Was the Fourth of July ball a wholly unofficial affair? The writer thinks not.

Pursuant to a call from the United States Representative American citizens met together to arrange for a proper celebration of their great national holiday, as their Representative stated the object of the meeting. Those American citizens then arranged a program of events which they no doubt considered suitable for the occasion. The program consisted of "a ball," "literary exercises," and the firing of "salutes."

The salutes fired in honor of the "day" were not unofficial salutes; the "literary exercises" given in honor of the "day" could not be termed unofficial exercises. At this event the Representative of the United States was the presiding officer of the day. It was not necessary that the ball should have been given by the American Representative to have made it an official function, it was an entertainment given in honor of a great national holiday, and it is the custom for the guests attending the Fourth of July dances to pay their respects to the American Representative, who is present to receive those honors.

In fact the program of events arranged by the American citizens was as official in character as was the reception held by Mr. and Mrs. Dole, surely that event was not wholly unofficial.

The Advertiser writer does not say that the Minister of Foreign Affairs or his colleagues sent their "regrets" to the ball committee, it is to be presumed that they did not, thus one of the politest acts of social courtesy was wholly disregarded. Whether the "ball" was a wholly unofficial affair or not, his social duties demanded the attendance of the Minister of Foreign Affairs on that occasion.

Under the circumstances the American committee have every cause to think that an intentional slight was intended by the present Government officials; nor can they be blamed for thinking so. "Want of tact" again. COURTESY.

Timely Topics.

Honolulu, July 9, 1896.

To-day we have something to say in regard to the De Laval Cream Separators and Barber's refrigerating machine.

As you all know, the purpose of the Cream Separator is the expeditious and complete separation of cream from milk in the most practical manner possible. The De Laval Separator is the invention of Dr. Gustaf De Laval of Sweden, one of the most practical scientists and useful inventors of any time, and distinguished generally as the Edison of Dairying."

Since its introduction in 1879 the De Laval Separator has wholly revolutionized dairying methods, and won the fight on behalf of centrifugal separation. It has alone brought about the broad development and universally demonstrated superiority of the new system to all other methods.

There are two general elements in the construction, purchase and use of the De Laval Cream Separators; complete separation, which is naturally the primary purpose of the machine, and the equally important one of accomplishing that separation in the most practical and economical manner.

The "De Laval" Power or Creamery and Factory sizes of Cream Separators are made in eight styles, in addition to the six sizes of the smaller "Baby" or Dairy De Laval machines for house dairying and cream gathering factory use. They range in capacity from 1100 lbs. to 4000 lbs. per hour, while the smaller ones run from 150 to 700 lbs.

For household and small dairy use the "Baby" or the Alpha "Humming Bird" which can be used by hand are recommended. You will save at least $10 a year each cow by their use, save time and trouble and obtain the most perfect cream. Barber's refrigerating machine is another one of those marvels of the inventive genius of the age and has been especially designed for small plants such as creameries, butter, cheese and egg storage houses.

We shall be pleased to furnish fuller information to all applying for it.

Another Solomon

For my own part, and I trust it is not irreverent to say so, it has always seemed to me that the incident put forward of all others as an example of the Biblical hero's wisdom is one of the least sagacious in his biography. There are many Eastern stories that might well compare with it if less dramatic; for the child under the lifted knife of the officer between the 2 claimant mothers, is a splendid denouement to a fine story. Here is another case from the records of an Eastern Court not unworthy of the great Oriental judge. A rich merchant died worth 300,000fr., which he bequeathed to certain monks, leaving them to give his only son such sum out of that amount as they wished. The monks took all to themselves without wishing to give anything to the son and heir. The latter made plaint before the Viceroy, who, having carefully read the will, sent for the monks and asked them what they were prepared to offer to the son. "Ten thousand francs," they replied. "You wish, then, to have all the rest?" "Yes, my lord; we demand the execution of the will." "That is just," said the Viceroy, "but you do not properly understand the will. It gives to the son what you wish; you grant 10,000 to the heir; it is then 290,000 that you wish. Following the clause of the will, therefore, this sum is set apart for the son. I order you to give it to him; the 10,000fr. remaining are yours."

Kate Field.

Very little public notice appears to have been taken of the decease of Miss Kate Field. Play goes with good memories will, however, recollect that she made at least one appearance on the London boards—namely, in her own comedietta called "Extremes Meet," which was produced at the St. James's nearly 20 years ago. Miss Field figured therein both as an actress and as a vocalist. Apparently she did not pursue her career in these capacities. Anyhow, she will be best remembered as the biographer both of Fechter and Madame Ristori.—The London People.

The Royal annex was one of the most tastefully decorated resorts in town, even if the grand mirror has a splash upon it. It is surprising to learn what bracers for weak nerves Peacock's men can put up for you while you admire the latest Correggio.

THE INDEPENDENT must again give notice that its paid carriers are not permitted to sell papers. It must be reluctantly confessed that there are grave grounds of suspecting that subscribers are robbed in order that some boys may make a dishonest nickle. If proof of this can be obtained an example will be made of the culprits, in the interest of honest carriers.

W. W. DIMOND'S

Put a ring around the word — opportunity — the occasion makes it. Never in the history of mercantile transactions in Honolulu have the people had such a golden opportunity to select a lamp as to-day. A manufacturer who had more than he knew what to do with, more than he had space to put them, wrote us of his troubles. We had none of our own so we listened to him. Our stock of lamps is the result of his tale of woe and you get the benefit.

A black lamp that will give a bright light is not a fad, but a style that will remain until "New Hawaii" shall become old. Being sombre in color they furnish with any decorations you may have in your room and any color shade that suits your fancy will look well on the lamp.

For a dinner table nothing furnishes better than black banquet lamps. We have them, not cumbersome, but of a height that will beautify rather than detract from the other features. We have piano lamps, hall lamps, boudoir lamps and every other character of lamp that ever was made. The prices are so low that it would injure our business to put them in this column.

THE RUSSIAN CALAMITY.

An Extraordinary and Sensational Theory Suggested by Some Behind the Scenes.

The reports contained in our last issue described only a few of the horrors associated with the calamity at Moscow resulting from the eagerness of the populace to become possessed of souvenirs of the Czar's coronation. The full number of the victims is estimated at 3,600, besides some 1,200 in hospital, the majority of whom are fatally injured. The official figures admit a mortality of less than 2,000, but are being largely belied; while the foregoing are derived from a high source. The exasperation of the people is intense. Immediately on receiving the news of the catastrophe the Queen telegraphed to Sir N. O'Connor, (British Ambassador), expressing her profound concern at the terrible event. The Czar and Czarina have visited the scene of the disaster and the hospitals, and have manifested deep and practical sympathy with the people; but mourning still hangs over the city, and the week has been largely occupied in identifying and burying the dead. Bonfires of pinewood have been constantly and have been surrounded by melancholy groups for the sake of warmth. Fully 500 laborers have been kept hard at work digging ten trenches, of an average length of 70yds., for the free burial of the dead. The trenches provided room for over 1,000 coffins, apart from hundreds of private graves.

BURNING TO PURIFY THE AIR.

A LADY'S EXPERIENCE.

This is the thrilling story told by a lady correspondent:—"Towards 8 a. m. cries of distress awoke me. My servant rushed into my room screaming, 'A frightful disaster happened on the Khodyuskoje field. My sister has returned home half dead. Her clothes were torn off, and hundreds of people have been crushed to death.' I hastened out. I can't persuade a cabman to drive me to the scene. A general, whom I do not know, takes pity on me, and drives me there. On the road we meet crowds returning home. Most of them carry the fatal presents—the red printed handkerchiefs and the iron enamelled goblets. The gigantic field was surrounded by a strong wooden fence, behind which which was a ditch 9ft. deep. It was

A REGULAR DEATH TRAP.

The people from the very beginning felt unsafe, and everybody thought some misfortune would happen. We had to leave the carriage at the first ditch. The dense crowd surrounded the place like a wall, and were all in a most excited state. 'Shoot Wlassowsky' was heard on one side, and on the other such cries as 'May God forgive us if we kill him.' Cossacks guarded the large open space where the corpses had been laid. The sight was that of an awful battle field. Over 1000 crushed bodies, some of them trodden to a pulp, with blue faces, eyes hanging out of the sockets, and broken legs and arms. I nearly fainted at sight of it all. Cries of pain, curses, and prayers were heard on all sides. The whole thing was like an awful dream. When I recovered, the first conveyances were arriving to carry away the dead. The corpses were piled one upon another on carts of the Fire Brigade, and covered with oilskins. The wounded were removed in closed carriages of the Red Cross Society. But the wounds were mostly only slight.

THOSE WHO FELL WERE LOST.

The raising of the corpses was so frightful that I could not bear the sight, and turned away. At the gate of the town I met the headmaster of the police in his carriage, with an escort of gendarmes. He was pale, and his temples were bleeding from a wound caused by a stone thrown at him. The crowds looked reproachfully but quietly at him. The calmness of the Slavs is really remarkable. At noon the masses returned to the field as if nothing had happened. The eye-witnesses of the disaster had already dispersed. Those who came after them were merry and thoughtless. A brilliant cortege of guests invited by the Czar appeared—magnificent carriages with white robed ladies, and above them golden sunlight. The contrast made me speechless. Even when a cart drove off with corpses partly visible, it did not seem to make any impression on the crowds. The imperial pavilion was most brilliantly decorated. At 2 p. m. their Majesties appeared, greeted by enthusiastic cheers. It seemed as if the people wished to comfort the Czar by proofs of love. The on hearing of the catastrophe. The people in the town are quiet, scarcely depressed. They say it was God's will. Most of the Moscow papers have not appeared because the printers were not to be found. The strictest inquiries are set on foot. All the facts are to be published, as the Czar wishes the whole truth to be made known. The Grand Duke is waiting to found an institution to have the children of those killed in the accident educated under their personal superintendence."

STARTLING THEORY.

A startling theory to account for the disaster has been formed on the spot, and communicated by way of Berlin. According to this statement the distribution was purposely begun prematurely before the police were on the spot by those who were anxious to conceal the fact that in the supplying of the provisions there had been a great deal of the customary Russian fraud and cheating. Had everything gone off properly, it would have been discovered that large supplies which the Government had paid for were lacking, and the rough instinct of the masses had been craftily speculated upon when the throwing of the parcels, apparently in fun, was begun. Several drivers of the cars containing the presents called out to the people who were clamouring for bread and water, "Here comes what the Czar is going to give us. Come and fetch it at once." The catastrophe was the result.—The People.

A Tale of the Sea.

And here is another wise judgment, which is old enough to come from Thibet, where Professor Max Muller finds so many quaint stories—probably only adaptations of some anterior period. All these subtle devices to outwit rogues and impostors come from the East. What judge was it, by the way, at an assize town in the direction of Plymouth who said that the further he traveled west the more convinced he was that the wise men came from the East? But to our story: A rich merchant died. He had one son, who, when quite a lad had been sent to an uncle in India. On his way home the young fellow was shipwrecked. It was believed that he escaped drowning, though no tidings of him could be obtained. His father died, leaving his fortune to the care of an old friend, not to be handed over to any claimant until certain injunctions had been fulfilled. At the end of a year a young man appeared declaring himself the heir; then a second and a third arrived on the scene. The guardian gave to each a bow and arrow, and desired them to use the dead man's picture as a target and aim at the heart. The first nearly hit the mark, the second drove his arrow home, but the third burst into tears and refused to dishonor his father's memory by desecrating the portrait of one whom he had loved and revered. The guardian knew which of the three was entitled to the fortune.
