COMING ELECTIONS. REV. DR. TALMAGE'S VIEWS ON A TIMELY SUBJECT.

The Politics of a Popular Pastor—Character as a Test of Fitness For Office—A Plea for the Sacredness of the Ten Commandments.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 29.—The text of Rev. Dr. Talmage's anti-election sermon was Exodus 20:16: "And all the people saw the thunderings and the lightnings and the noise of the trumpet and the mountain smoking." He said:

On the eve of elections in the 60 counties of this state, and in all the counties of most of the United States, while there are many hundreds of millions of votes to be cast, it is appropriate and important that I preach this before election sermon.

My text informs you that the lightnings and earthquakes which the Lord sent to smite the people of Amalek were not sent to smite the people of Amalek, but to smite the people of Israel. And the Lord says that I should try to show you that the most important thing to be settled about all these candidates is their personal, moral character. The Deologue forbids idleness, image making, profanity, insult to parents, Sabbath desecration, and murder, theft, incontinence, lying and covetousness. That is the Deologue by which you and I will have to be tried, and by the same Deologue you and I must try candidates for office.

Of course we shall not find anything like perfection. If we do not vote until we find an immediate nominee, we will never vote at all. We have so many families of our own we ought not to be censorious or malicious or hypercritical in regard to the faults of others. The Christly rule is as appropriate for November as any other month in the year. "Judge not that ye be not judged, for with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again."

Most certainly we do not to take the statement of relict participation as the real character of any man. From nearly all the great cities of this land I receive daily or weekly newspapers, sent to me regularly and in compliance, so I see both sides—I see all sides—and it is most entertaining and my regular amusement to read the opposite statements of the same man. One says the man is an angel, and the other says he is a devil, and I split the difference and I find him half way between.

There never has been an honest or respectable man in the history of the United States presidency, or for a judgeship, or for the mayoralty, or for the shirelevy since the foundation of the American government, if we may believe the old files of newspapers in the museums. What a mercy it is that they were not all hung before they were inaugurated! If a man believe one-half of what he sees in the newspapers in these times, his career will be very short outside of Bloomingdale's lunatic asylum.

I was absent two or three years ago during one week of a political canvass, and I was dependent entirely upon what I read in regard to what had occurred in these cities, and I read there was a procession in New York of 5,000 patriots, and a minute after I read in another sheet that there were 17,000, and then I read in regard to another procession that there were 10,000, and then I read in another paper that there were 92,000.

A catapann orator in the Rink or the Academy of Music received a very odd reception—a very chilling reception—said one statement. The other statement said the audience rose at him. So great was the enthusiasm that for a long while the orator could not be heard, and it was only after lifting his hand that the vociferation began to subside! One statement will twist an interview one way, and another statement will twist an interview another way. You must admit it is a very difficult thing in times like these to get a very accurate estimate of a man's character, and I charge you, as your religious teacher, I charge you to caution and professiveness and to prayer.

I warn you also against the mistake which many are making and always do make of applying a different standard of character for those in prominent position from the standard they apply for ordinary persons. However much a man may have or however high the position he gets, he has no special liberty given him in the interpretation of the Ten Commandments. A great sinner is no more to be excused than a small sinner. Do not charge illustrations of eccentricity or eccentricity or slip off the Ten Commandments to suit special cases. The right is everlastingly right, and the wrong is everlastingly wrong. If any man nominated for any office in this city or state differs from the Deologue, do not take up the Deologue, but fix him up. The law must stand, whatever else must fall.

COMMANMENT BREAKING. I call your attention also to the fact that you are all aware of—that the breaking of one commandment makes it the more easy to break all of them—and the philosophy is plain. Any kind of sin weakens the conscience, and if the conscience is weakened that opens the door for all kinds of transgression. If, for instance, a man go into this political campaign wielding severity as his chief weapon, and he believes everything bad about a man and believes nothing good, how long before that man has

GIVE THANKS.

To-morrow the Americans of the Hawaiian Islands will give thanks for the blessings of the past year—blessings which have been of signal and far-reaching value to them and to this country and to the cause of Christianity and civilization.

Since the last Thanksgiving day a heathen monarchy, grasping at despotic power and corrupt in body and soul, has been overpowered and cast from the high places.

Within the few days past a fateful plot to put that monarchy upon its pagan throne once more has been checked by a Providential delay out of which we have faith to believe, will come the final and full fruition of our hopes.

For prosperity and health the Christian people of these Islands have individual and domestic reasons, also, to be thankful to a watchful and benignant Providence.

DON'T PROTECT AN OATH-BREAKER.

We trust that the Supreme Court will not be too technical in its dealings with the case of Wundenberg. Even if the proofs that his statement to Blount was largely false were not so conclusive as they are, the fact would remain that Wundenberg has broken his oath of allegiance while his Government is still in power, and cannot be hereafter depended upon for loyal and faithful service.

If the Provisional Government had been overturned when Wundenberg made his untrue and treasonable statement, the usage of nations might have held that his oath to support it had been annulled. But he has no such justification. He acted his threatening part while the Government which he had sworn to sustain had not a single enemy in arms and had suffered no interruption of its duties.

There is one more point. A settled principle of law is that "anything necessary to keep a State from anarchy is absolutely necessary." What, we may ask, is likely to be more productive of that danger than the official countenance and support of men who are plotting the overthrow of the Government and aiding and abetting its enemies?

The "Gen." Willey who came out for the Monarchs some time ago has just been refused a position of trust in California because of his record. He was quite as earnest against the "dishonest course of the P. G." while here as Rubezler Sullivan himself.

BLOUNT AND CONGRESS.

If the United States Government had acted with the best vision and justice towards Hawaii it would have sent at least five Commissioners to these Islands instead of one and would have drawn them from both parties of Congress and from the Judiciary.

Mr. Blount had come to Honolulu with a prejudice which no testimony could shake. People felt that he wanted to make capital against Harrison and Stevens and against the Northern colonists of Hawaii rather than to acquire facts which would lead to a policy of justice towards us by the United States.

Blount soon lost a great measure of public confidence, and deserved to. That which remained was due to deceptive statements made by him to men like Justice Judd and Mr. Damon, from which they and their friends naturally inferred that, in the end, he meant to show that his actions here had been misrepresented.

The circumstances of the Blount mission, therefore, make it only fair that Congress should review his report and his proceedings here and call for evidence in support of the charges he has made and the conclusions he has reached. Perhaps another commission would be advisable, composed of Senators and Representatives, those of judicial experience preferred, the functions of which should be, with the consent of the Provisional Government, to hold a court of inquiry on this ground.

To our mind Mr. Willis' change of plan upon his arrival here will be looked upon by future historians and commentators as providential, both as regards his own country and this. The delay he has wrought will, it seems, bring the Hawaiian issue to the bar of the sovereign people, the bar of Congress. There, at least, Americans may look for justice, there the multitude of counsel, in which is wisdom, will keep down a policy of infamy and exalt the basal principles of the republic; there at any rate all sides of the question may be heard—and to that tribunal Hawaiian civilization now appeals with the voice of sincerity, of confidence and of fellowship.

THE "GEN." AND STEVENS.

His Vigorous Character in His Late Days. The Hon. John L. Stevens of Maine, who was President Harrison's Minister to the Hawaiian Islands, copied in our columns yesterday in the bitter attack made upon him by Mr. Gresham in his now notorious report to President Cleveland regarding the Hawaiian situation.

All that American party, American benevolence, American schools and American patriots have accomplished in Hawaii in the past seventy years, says Mr. Stevens, is now centralized in the Provisional Government, and stands in its support. It is a Government honest and able administered, and the best government that Hawaii ever had.

This new Government, thus established and recognized, was not assailed by the Queen and her followers. While the citizens were attending their most precious, selecting their committees of public safety, and preparing to organize a Government, as openly as public meetings are held in any American city, the disorganized and powerless followers of the Queen and her paramour made no attempt to stir her from the deposition which her rash and corrupt conspiracy against the King had procured.

The Hawaiian memory had been extinguished for many days, and the Provisional Government had been in full and untrammelled control of the city and country for fully two days, when Mr. Stevens recognized it, his example being followed by the representatives of other foreign powers.

This is the history of this memorable affair as narrated by the best informed and most trustworthy observer, the Minister of the United States, gentleman, as we have said, of the highest and most unimpeachable character, who was present and witnessed everything from beginning to end. And now another American President, led by we know not what sentiment, or what unrevealed consideration, proposes to turn back the hands upon the dial, to reverse all that has been done, and to restore the corrupt and shameless Queen who has destroyed her throne by a revolutionary conspiracy.

JUSTICE GRAY'S CARRIAGE.

The Boston Marshal Proved Himself Equal to the Emergency. Attorney General Olney tells the following story about Mr. Justice Gray of the United States supreme court. Judge Gray professes to be a man of a carriage or two to a street car. When he first took the court in Boston, he asked the United States marshal to provide him with a carriage to transport him from his hotel to the court and back to the hotel for the day's session. The marshal was extraordinarily prompt and cheerful in complying with the wishes of the distinguished jurist. From Boston Judge Gray went to Providence to hold court. He asked the United States marshal there to provide him with a carriage to carry him back and forth. The marshal said he could not do so without paying for the vehicle out of his own pocket. "Why, how's that?" exclaimed the astonished jurist. "The department would not allow the account, and I'll have to pay it," explained the marshal. "But the marshal at Boston furnished me with a carriage and had no trouble with his account," said Judge Gray. "I don't see how he did it," protested the Providence marshal. "I know if I tried it that it in my accounts would be disallowed."

Architecture.

The remedy must begin with the foundation. The problems which I long considered to have put before the students in architecture were a director of the Institute of Technology consisted of the questions with which I was called upon to deal myself. I would make the problem given out to students in every school of architecture, to be solved by the number submitted, of a possible type. One would be the layout of an industrial town, choosing as a possible site a bit of unoccupied land somewhere in the neighborhood of the city, with a stream running through it, connecting it with the water supply. Power might be generated, or by a landing place for the fuel from which the power might be derived. To one pupil I would assign the layout of the land; to another the water supply and drainage; to another the construction of the principal factory; to another the construction of the lesser workshops; to another the streets and other shops; to another the houses of the working classes; to another the separate dwellings; to another the Catholic and Protestant churches; to another the hospital, and to another the school houses. Here you have the real problems of American industrial life, scarcely one of which has yet been taught or solved in the right way, so as to combine true art with utility and safety.—Edward Atkinson.

The Kaiser as a Latin Student.

Emperor William's love of the use of Latin quotations—he is an excellent Latin scholar, due to the splendid training at the gymnasium of Cassel—was illustrated again recently in his telegram to the Berlin Regatta Wagnersociety. "Navigare necesse est, vivere non nocet," wrote his majesty in the course of the congratulatory words. The saying, it may be remembered, is that of Pompey, and is to be found in chapter 50 of Plutarch's biography. In order to prevent a famine in Rome in the year 57 B. C., Pompey was ordered to import as much grain as possible to the city. He had 15 assistants. In order to assure the success of his work he went in person to Sicily, Sardinia and Africa. When on the point of returning home, a terrible storm broke forth, and the sailors refused to go to sea with the load of grain. Pompey sprang into one of the ships and commanded the anchors to be raised, adding: "It is necessary that we embark; it is not necessary that we live." This classical remark is engraved over the entrance to the famous "Schaffershaus" in Bremen.—New York Tribune.

Incandescent Lights.

People who use incandescent lights should always keep in mind the fact that there is danger over looking about the brilliant little illuminators. It is an easy matter to explain without going into the technicalities of electric science. Of course you will say 50 or 100 volts will not do much harm, but don't be too sure of that, and particularly don't imagine that 50 or 100 volts is all your little wire will carry. Sometimes the incandescent gets crossed with a high current wire, the case it is expected by the electrician that the safety fuse will blow out and thus cut off the connections, but sometimes this fuse don't work. I could cite many instances in which it did not, and as a consequence disaster resulted. No matter how much care is taken to make the lights safe, there is always danger in fooling with lightning. Never attempt to turn on the light should the floor be wet, for a ground circuit is a deadly thing, and don't take hold of the metal fixtures with one hand and then use the other to turn on the light. The precautions are easily observed.—Boston Transcript.

Her Escort.

A lady acquaintance of mine was left in the middle of a theatrical performance the other evening by her husband, who was called away suddenly. He promised to return for her at the end of the performance, or else to send an escort. Well, he didn't return, and as the anxious woman—by the way, she is very tall—stood in the lobby looking about, the very smallest specimen of a messenger boy that she had ever seen, approached her and said: "Are you Mrs. —?" "Yes." "Well, I'm to escort you home." "Oh, no," was her response, "I've enough to do to take care of myself. I can't look after other people's children!" And she called a cab—Polly Pry in New York Recorder.

German Electors.

The title of elector is peculiarly German, being found in the same sense nowhere outside the limits of the German states. They were so called because in the thirteenth century seven princes, the king of Bohemia, the archbishops of Mainz, Trier and Cologne and the rulers of Brandenburg and Saxony and the Palatinate assumed the privilege of electing the emperor. An elector, elector, Bavaria, was admitted to the circle in 1618, and a ninth, Hanover, in 1624.

The Evidence of Friendship.

Yellow—I have come to you to ask you to do a friendly act for me. I know you are my friend and that I can rely on your friendship. Brownly—Yes—er—but—er—why have you such confidence in my friendship? Y.—Because you are always poking your nose into my business. You would not do that, I'm sure, unless you took a deep interest in me.—New York Express.

His Dinner.

"I was travelling in Indiana," said the dramatist, "and in order to make several towns where I thought I could sell some goods I was obliged to drive about 40 miles. I went through some of the queerest little towns I had ever seen during that drive. I never saw a more queer lot of people for dinner. "The hotel was an ordinary frame house. The front room had a sort of a counter across one end, and the local postoffice was perched on that counter. There were two or three chairs scattered about, and a great sheet iron stove, big enough to take in the stump of a good sized tree, stood in the center of the room. The landlord told me to sit down in the office and took my team and stowed it away somewhere. When he returned, I asked him if I could get some dinner. "I reckon," he said, "is it nearly ready?" I asked, for I was hungry as a bear. "No," he said again, and then he disappeared from sight. "Half an hour later a good looking girl came out and said that dinner was ready. I followed her through a long hall into a little room at one end of the building, and she motioned me to a seat at a pine table which held a few dishes and which had no cloth. I sat down and she disappeared. I waited for 30 minutes and was just about to go away in disgust when the same girl came bustling into the room and took a stand behind my chair. "Bean soup" she asked in a persuasive voice. "No, I said, 'I don't think I care for any bean soup.' " "Bean soup" she inquired again, still more persistently. "I don't want any," I replied shortly. "Then dinner's over," she said, and with that she disappeared, and, by Jove! dinner was over. I never saw another person could I get to come near me, and I had to harness my team myself.—Buffalo Express.

Passports In Russia.

I traveled second class. On boarding the Russian train I observed that the passports were returned to my fellow passengers, but not to me, which caused me some anxiety. Finally a gendarme came in and handed me my passport. After a few minutes the same gendarme came again, accompanied by the conductor, and said to me in a commanding tone, "Four passports!" I answered as politely as possible that my passport had already been examined and stamped and asked why he wanted it a second time. Stepping up to me, the gendarme roared out as if he were drilling a fresh recruit from the village, "The cabin door. 'Russia is a gigantic prison, where honest men must submit to be treated as criminals.' " My fellow passengers looked at me, as it seemed, with suspicion, and my own feelings were somewhat excited by the words of a Russian nobleman to me on a former visit. "Russia is a gigantic prison, where honest men must submit to be treated as criminals." After about an hour the conductor handed me my passport. On examining it I could not discover that anything had been done to it beyond writing my name in Russian on it. An old German gentleman who had observed my anxiety said to me in a low and paternal tone, "In Russia you must never ask questions, nor make objections, nor worry yourself, but quietly submit and leave everything to God."—Century.

A Desperate Attack.

A remarkable exhibition of "nerve" in shooting was given by Colonel Nightingale, a famous sportsman of India. He had got a tiger shot at a tiger from the back of his elephant, lifting him in the shoulder. The tiger rushed after and made for some bushes 150 yards off, whence a man emerged. The tiger rushed at him and struck him down. Tiger and man were in a confused heap on the ground. At the risk of hitting the man the colonel fired and heard the ball strike a bone. The tiger, with a roar, rolled off the man and plunged into a ravine. The colonel's loaded bullet had carried off the lower jaw and fangs of the brute. No other shot would have saved the man, but without a jaw the tiger could not seize him. The man, who was dead and moving about the jungle, had only been scratched by the tiger's claws.—Youth's Companion.

Averted a Bank Run.

A story is told of how a bright teller averted a disastrous run on a bank in an Arkansas town. The president and cashier were both absent when the panic began, and there were only a few hundred dollars in the safe. The teller took several hundred sacks which had been made to hold $1,000 each and had them filled with iron washers and nuts at a neighboring hardware store. He piled these sacks up behind him, placing the little money which he had in sacks on the top of the pile, and proceeded to pay checks as fast as presented. The depositors, seeing what they supposed was thousands of dollars, concluded they were unnecessarily alarmed, and the run came to an end.—Kansas City Times.

Songs of the Houseboats.

It was a grand sight to the small boys of Lexington to see the docklands swarming along one at each end of a coal box and 50 men in line carrying coal to the bunkers of such boats as the F. X. Auberg, James H. Lucas, Polar Star and Clara, and if they were lucky, hands singing on the banks can sing, or as they could in those days. The coal was carried aboard at night by the light of the pine knot fire, and the small boys sat around and caught the words of a new song. The boys got their songs in thousands of dollars, and the steamboats. The "border boys" had but two ambitions—one was to cross the plains and be a "wagon boss," and the other to be a steamboat captain.—St. Louis Letter.

A Preference.

He was selling her dry goods. It was evident that her haughty, distant manner cut him to the quick. "Excuse me, miss," he said as he stopped in the middle of a measurement of cloth, "but aren't you the young lady who promised to be a sister to me at Cape May?" "It may be that I am," she answered freely. "I wish you would take back that promise." "Why?" "Because I'd rather be a total stranger than a poor relation any day."—Washington Star.

It Related the Gold Fever.

The late General Beale is said to have brought the first specimen of gold from California to the east in 1848. He crossed through Mexico disguised as an English lieutenant—it was a dangerous place for Americans so soon after the war—and managed to get aboard the United States ship Saratoga, then lying off San Blas, in command of Captain (laterward Admiral) Farragut. It was the report thus brought by General Beale that stimulated the gold fever all over the country.—Chicago Herald.

He Asked for a Parrot.

He asked for a parrot if she wanted a cracker, but I could not quite make out her reply. She—Polly speaks very indistinctly at times. Perhaps she was trying to say that she preferred chocolates. He—Um, I'll bring a box next time and see.—Good News.

GEMS IN VERSE.

Hope, Yes, death is at the bottom of the cup, And every one that drinks it up, And yet below the surface at the top, And the black less a hole looks that bitter drop There swims enough good liquor, heaven knows, To ease our hearts of all our other woes. The bubbles rise in sunshine at the bottom, But they belie the truth, fat and slim; The quick fumes spread and shape us such bright dreams As though the world were all a golden mine, That in the end delirium it seems As though some dew-droplet, if so we will, That drop untasted might be somehow spilled. —W. D. Howells.

The Ant as an Engineer.

The poetry was delicious, and I wanted it myself. So I put it in the pantry on the very lowest shelf. And to keep it from the insects, those ants so red and small, I made a river round it of molasses, best of all. But the enemy approached it, all as hungry as could be, And the captain, with his aid-de-camp, just skinned round to see Whether they could find this river or should try some other plan, And together with his comrades he around the liquid ran. To his joy and satisfaction, after traveling around, The place where the molasses was the narrowest he found; Then again he recommenced, rushing forward and then back, Till he spilled some loosened plaster in the wall around a tack. He divided then his forces, with a foreman for each squad, And he marshaled the whole army and before him each and trod. His directions all were given; to his chiefs he gave a call, While he headed the procession as they marched off up the wall. Every ant then seized his plaster, just a speck and nothing more, and hurried till he'd brought it to the shore; Then they built their bridge, just working for an hour by the sky. After which they all marched over and all fell to eating pie. —St. Nicholas.

The Saint and the Sinner.

Heartily and warmly the woman sat, The baby sleeping across her knee, And the work her fingers were to do at seemed a pitiful task for such as she— Mending shoes for the little feet That pattered over the cobblestones. While the bells of the Sabbath day rang sweet And the neighbors passed by the open door. The children played, and the baby slept, And the busy people went and came, Which, he thought, the third child stone there slept A pretty figure among her name. "What shirt is this for the Sabbath day, When bells are ringing and far and near The people gather to praise and sing? Woman, why are you toiling here?" Like one in a dream she answered low: "Father, my days are workdays all. I know not Sabbath, I dare not go. Whose the beautiful bells ring out and call, For who would look to the street and drink And tend the children and keep the place? I pray in silence and try to think, For God's love, to listen and give no grace." The year passed on, not with fast and prayer, The good priest, at the table of rest, And a tired woman stood waiting there, Her work on her hands to her bosom pressed. "O said this blessed, moment thou on high," He heard the wailing, "The saints are they? When meekly, gently, she passed him by, Who had mended shoes on the Sabbath day." —Ladies' Home Journal.

The Road to Yesterday.

Wilt some who man who has journeyed Over land and over sea To the countries where the rainbow And the glorious rivers flow, Kindly tell a little stranger, Who has oddly lost his way, Where's the road that she must travel To return to Yesterday? For, you see, she's unfamiliar With Today and cannot read What its strange, mysterious signposts Tell of ways and where they lead, And her heart aches to be sure, Though she did not mean to stray When she fell asleep last evening And abandoned Yesterday. For she felt a deal neglected, That she really should have done, And she feels she's lost some favors That she fairly might have won, So she'd like to turn her backward To retrieve them if she can. Will not some one kindly tell her Where's the road to Yesterday? —St. Nicholas.

To My Wife.

Here, then, today, with faith as sure, With ardor as intense and pure, As when amidst the roses and the lilies I took thy truth and pledged mine, To thee, dear love, my second ring, A token and a pledge I bring, With this I seal my love's part, Thy ripper virtues to my heart— These virtues which, before untired, And her heart aches to be sure, Though she did not mean to stray When she fell asleep last evening And abandoned Yesterday. For she felt a deal neglected, That she really should have done, And she feels she's lost some favors That she fairly might have won, So she'd like to turn her backward To retrieve them if she can. Will not some one kindly tell her Where's the road to Yesterday? —St. Nicholas.

To a Long Faced Query.

I'll hang deep crepe on the door of my heart For the time, if you'll have it so, And wrap my soul in the cap and bells Until every inch spells woe. Our converse will smother the funeral vault And the graveyard's grisly stone, And I'll make myself in a solemn way, A most infernal bore. But where's the use? It's a queer old world, With not too much joy at the best, And there's never a heart, if it is a heart, That's the worse for a timely jest. Let the last day come ere it's sin to sing Or to joke a capital crime. For me, I'd rather live shaking with fun Than with agony at times. —Philadelphia Times.

Liberty.

The sensual and the dark rebel in vain, Slaves by their own compulsion. In mad game They hunt their manacles and wear the name Of freedom given on a heavier chain. O Liberty! with profitless endeavor Have I pursued thee many a weary hour, But thou art sweetest the victor's strain, nor ever Didst breathe thy soul in forms of human power. Alas! from all, how'er they praise thee (Nor prayer nor boastful names delay thee), Alas! from priests' and hazy melons And factions bias, busy's obedient slaves, Thou speakest on thy subtle pinnacles, The guide of homeless winds and playmate of the waves. —Coleridge.

Here's to good men!

Here's to good men! Heaven make them glad! Here's to all women—good or bad! Here's to all children—bless them all! Here's to kind hearts, all round the ball! —James B. Wiggins.

The Educated Farmer.

The educated farmer of today is placed almost beyond competition, while the lawyer, the mechanic and the doctor find talented competition on every corner. The scientific man's education enables him to make the most of the occult laws of nature governing farm life. By a knowledge of economic botany he is able to make the most of his soil and crops; by a judicious selection of plants best adapted to his farm, both as regards soil and climate.—Science.

WHY YOU WANT THE "STAR!"

Every person in the community—man, woman or child—who is able to read and who desires to keep in touch with the spirit of this progressive age and wishes to be posted as to events of interest which are continually happening at home and abroad, on land and sea.

The STAR is a new paper and has introduced California methods of journalism into Hawaii, where before its advent, the Massachusetts newspaper traditions of 1824 held sway. It has three prime objects: To Support the cause of annexation of Hawaii to the United States and assist all other movements, political, social or religious, which are of benefit to these Islands and their people. To print all the news of its parish without fear or favor, telling what goes on with freshness and accuracy, suppressing nothing which the public has the right to know. To make itself indispensable to the family circle by a wise selection of miscellaneous reading matter.

As a commentator the STAR has never been accused of unworthy motives.

As a reporter the STAR has left no field of local interest ungleamed.

As a friend of good government the STAR has been instant in service and quick to reach results.

As an advertising medium the STAR, from the week of its birth, has been able to reach the best classes of people on all the Islands.

DANA ON JOURNALISM

HE DISCUSSED THE TRAINING OF NEWSPAPER MAKERS.

Don't think the colleges are very successful in training journalism but a good education is a valuable asset.

In a lecture delivered at Union college in the afternoon of Nov. 19, Dana discussed the training of newspaper makers.

The subject of journalism and young men who are looking at this new profession, which for the want of a better name we call the profession of journalism, is very great. I suppose that I remember myself very clearly, taking one day which another, had a dozen letters from men, many of them college graduates, asking for employment and an opportunity of showing what is in them.

What sort of preparation, what sort of preliminary education, should a man have who means to devote himself to this business? There are colleges which have lately introduced schools of journalism or departments of journalism, where they propose to teach the art of newspaper making to instruct the student in the methods he should employ and to fit him out so that he can go to a newspaper office and make a newspaper.

There is an question that accuracy, the faculty of seeing a thing as it is, of knowing for instance that it is 24 and not 25, and saying so—that is one of the first and most precious ends of a good education.

Next to that I would put the ability to know how and when to write. I would like to look for what you don't know and what you want to know.

There is an question that accuracy, the faculty of seeing a thing as it is, of knowing for instance that it is 24 and not 25, and saying so—that is one of the first and most precious ends of a good education.

In addition come the qualities of person, of talent and genius. Now genius is a great factor. When we think of such a genius as the one I have just named—the late Mr. Greeley, why, our minds may well be filled with admiration. I do not suppose more than one or two gentlemen here ever knew Mr. Greeley personally, but he was a man of immense ability, of instincts of extraordinary correctness in many respects, and of the power of expression of telling what he knew in a delightfully picturesque, humorous way—which not merely interested the hearer and reader, but gave him a sense of delight and satisfaction from the mere art that was applied in the telling.

But he lacked one of the most precious faculties, which is another great object of the college education to cultivate and bring out, and that is what we call the critical faculty, the judgment which, when a proposition is stated to you or a fact is reported, looks at it calmly and says, "That is true," or else, "That is false;" the judgment, the instinct, the developed and cultivated instinct which knows the truth when it is presented and detects error when it comes masquerading before you, without the necessity of any long examination to ascertain whether it is truth or error.

The next thing that I would dwell upon would be the knowledge of politics and especially American politics. This is a very hard subject. Its history is difficult. If you go back to the foundation of the republic, you will find it was a very complicated even then, and it requires very careful study and a very elevated impartiality to your own party as you go through the work.

THE MODERN CREAMERY.

It has not changed the Power of the Fate of the Dairy.

They nearly always have been a creamery in action and have exactly low better in the milk which has taken the place of that once in vogue in every farm-dairy.

Early in the morning this new milk is made. It is very steadily into a receiver, and there it is cooled with a circulating water which is whirling at the rate of 4,000 revolutions a minute.

The enormous churn, which receives the milk, is rotated by a motor which is in shape exactly like those used by many a farmer's wife and turns bodily with every revolution.

As the table turns a woman shakes over the butter into a sieve, an ounce of salt is poured into the butter, and a few more revolutions of the rollers have worked it into the butter is made.

Very few copies appear to have been printed, but it is a book which would probably sell for a high price. A copy in a recent catalogue of Mr. Quarrels was marked at $5.00.

The most striking thing about the Pastor is the wonderful capital letters, and how these were printed is always a very interesting question.

There is a certain way that experienced stockmen know of throwing a horse down so as to break his neck and kill him at once. An ordinary halter is put on the horse, the lead strap from it passed between the horse's front legs, a turn being taken around the far one near the fetlock.
