(Specially written for "Side Lights" by D. T. Fleming, Paia, Maui.)

Among the magnificent works of nature, so generously distributed among the various islands which comprise the Territory of Hawaii, and which make them an ideal spot for the tourist to visit, without doubt the crater of Haleakala on the island of Maui is the grandest, excepting possibly the volcano of Kilauea, when Madame Pele wakes up from one of her protracted naps. Many tourists, and even residents of the neighboring islands after making a trip to Kilauea say: "I have seen an active volcano. Extinct craters would now have no charm for me." In this they are greatly mistaken, for there is little or no resemblance between the two craters, Haleakala and Kilauea.

Imagine yourself standing at an altitude of 10,000 feet, on the top of Haleakala, with the vast crater, 3,000 deep and twenty miles in circumference, stretched at your feet. Dotted over the floor of the crater, which from the top seems smooth, rise numerous cones, which in themselves are miniatures of the great crater. There is the little lava cone from which has flowed in ages past a furious stream of molten lava; and the immense cinder cone, six or eight hundred feet high and a mile or more in circumference, which has evidently burned the matter of which it was originally composed, until it is now but a mound of bright red and yellow scoria. And starting at the base of some of these cones can be seen the long, black lava flows which have rushed down the bottom of the crater and are yet as fresh as if the fires had died yesterday. And far away to the southeast, over the banks of white clouds that cover the greater part of Hawaii, rise the three grand peaks of that island, Mauna Kea, Mauna Loa and Hualalai, and from the second of these, occasionally a thin line of smoke ascending proves to the onlooker that Pele has not left her old home.

At the east end of the crater the white masses of cloud rolled along, ever seeking to enter the crater through the Kaupo Gap, yet ever driven back from the abode of the great Pele by the cold mountain winds; on the north also is a similar gap, wilder and more rugged, if possible, than the Kaupo gap. Through these two gaps, the Koolau and Kaupo, when the crater was yet active, the great streams of molten lava escaped and ran with terrific violence to the sea.

To the west, the clouds lying along the mountain side at an elevation of seven or eight thousand feet look like a sea, a solid white mass on which the onlooker would think it almost possible to tread, so solid does it appear; or when the weather is more favorable and this belt of clouds does not interfere, far below on the plains the green patches of cane and the white plantation camps show that civilization is yet visible.

And at evening, when the sun sinks to rest, tinting the great mass of clouds from a delicate pink to a gorgeous pink and yellow, lighting the great crater to a ruddier glow, and the cold winds comes sighing up through the gorges, and whistling on the rocky crags, the grandeur of the scene fills the onlooker with awe; so that he must exclaim: "How marvelous are Thy works!"

The trip to the volcano and return is a very easy one. From Kahului, Maui's leading sea port, a railroad runs to Paia, a distance of eight miles; and from Paia, which is within doubt the best starting point, the entire distance to the top is but twenty miles, and of that eight or ten miles can be covered in a hack, if the prospective sightseer dreads the length of the ride. After the tourist has reached Makawao, where the good driving road is discontinued, he mounts a good sturdy mountain horse and from then the cry need be nothing but "Excelsior." The grade is heavy, but the country is open and easy climbing for the horses. Up, up—past Olinda, the beautiful summer home of Mr. H. P. Balwin, up through brush and over rough rocky land, where the trail can hardly be seen, but trusting to the guide, up, up, up.

If the traveler has left Paia in the morning, noon will find him at an altitude of five or six thousand feet, where water in plenty may be had for lunch and for the horses; and three or four o'clock will find him at Little Cave, the best place near the top to spend the night. Several years ago a house was built on the summit, but it has since been almost demolished by the storms which rage during the winter months, and no one now thinks of spending a night there. Little Cave conveniently holds a party of six or eight, and a jolly place it is, with a natural chimney in one corner and nothing to do but to gather the wood. This pleasant part of the trip is left for the guide to attend to and the tourist goes up to the summit, a quarter of a mile or so distant, to see the sunset.

No writer need begin to describe the grandeur of the scene; nothing but positive realization can convey the least idea. Or, if the weather be slightly foggy, often the visitor is treated to a sight of the beautiful Spectre of Brocken, the complete circle of a rainbow, with the shadow of the onlooker in the center.

When once the sun disappears the tired traveler feels the chilly winds as they whistle along the ridges, and he hastily gets back to the comforts of—not home, but Little Cave, where a good supper has already been prepared.

A good warm meal, and then to rest—scarcely rest either, as most parties find it, for sleep is a rare thing at that altitude, about 9,000 feet. This is indeed the ideal place to tell stories and spin all sorts of yarns as the fire in the corner crackles merrily, filling the whole cave with its warmth.

About 4 a. m. the eastern sky begins to tint to a delicate yellow and pink and the sightseer must roll out and start for the summit once more. Provided the clouds be about their usual levels, the sunrise indeed rivals sunset in its grandeur; and even the great masses of cumulus lying along the sides of the mountains of Hawaii, Molokai, Lanai and Kahoolawe are tinted most beautifully.

The excitement of the sunrise over, the attention is naturally turned toward a more personal matter—that of breakfast; and a good warm meal goes very well indeed. And next in order is a tramp to some interesting places. If the traveler wants to try his climbing powers, as well as the leather in his shoes, he may descend the walls into the crater, crossing one or two of the flows, climb one of the cones. Or, farther still, he may go down along the floor of the crater to Kamehameha's camp, a spot famous as being the camping place of the greatest of all Hawaii chieftains, on his victorious march across the crater to the northern side of the island, after having put the Hana district under subjection. To shield his army from the bitterly cold night-winds, he built semicircular walls of stones which remain to this day. Poor shelters indeed they must have been, but under the circumstances better than nothing.

Or the traveler may wander along the ridge of the crater towards the highest part of the mountain, picking up an occasional silver-sword, that most beautiful of all high altitude plants, till he reaches Paa Kaaoo, or Fortified Hill, as it is sometimes called. On this hill stood a small fort, held by one of Maui's chiefs, who was slain bravely defending the rude structure against the invincible Kamehameha. Evidences of the struggles are yet to be found there—the ancient "mao," or slingstone, that formed so leading a part of the ancient Hawaiians' weapons of war. Also, the grave of the brave Maui leader is yet intact, marked by an oval pile of stones. Close to this hill are the "black diamonds," these are small black crystals that may be found in great quantities, provided the seacher knows exactly where to look for them.

If the traveler gets back to the cave by noon, a return to Paia can easily be made before dark, allowing for frequent rests on the way. It is really remarkable how few of the thousands of tourists visiting Hawaii avail themselves of seeing the greatest crater in the world, either extinct or active. There seems to be a mistaken idea that the trip is a hard one and an expensive one. Far from it. It is an easy trip, one that can be made with comfort, and one that is inexpensive. But even if the trip were as hard and expensive as many people imagine to be, no one who had ever made the trip could grudge the effort or expense. The most probable explanation of the apparent lack of appreciation lies in the fact that the sight of this greatest of Nature's miracles is free for all.

Tourists are Coming.

The tourist information Bureau is in the midst of a perfect deluge of letters received from the mainland in last night's mail, the idea of Secretary Boyd being to have every one of these answered by the Alameda which sails tomorrow. These letters are for the most part requests for information so that besides the letters which go forward, there will also be a mass of advertising matter on Hawaii.

Mr. Boyd stated this morning that he had received a letter from the information bureau in Brussels, asking for information regarding what can be seen here, this for the benefit of the many tourists who start out from that place for the Orient every year.

It has been learned also that the tours now being arranged on the mainland for the flower season in Japan include a ten days lay over trip in Honolulu. The lead in this matter is being taken by the Nippon-California Tourist Co., of Boston.

The Gates tours of January and February with Hawaii as the objective point are filling very nicely. The first lot of tourists under this arrangement will be here in the January Alameda.—Bulletin

Cedars of Lebanon.

Not more than 400 of the "Cedars of Lebanon" are standing today. They do not, though their age is measured in years by thousands, rival in dimensions the cedars of the West-ern world, the largest, so slow in their growth, being but 12 feet in diameter. No tree gives so great an expanse of shade as the cedar, and it never dies, except from lightning stroke or the woodman's axe.

The newspaper of any county or town is an infallible reflex of the public spirit and enterprise of its citizens. The News is reproached for not having been already enlarged to an eight-page paper, and yet a glance at its columns will at once reveal the fact that not one single prominent business house in Wailuku has the foresight or enterprise to advertise. The Honolulu and Hilo papers tell quite another story and that is why they can afford eight-page papers and dailies. The News could easily be made an eight-pager, but without liberal advertising patronage from the leading business house of Maui, it would not prove a paying proposition. Heretofore the sugar industry has been the only industry on the Islands and that needed no publicity. But new times and new industries are arriving, and their success and permanency will be perfectly illustrated in the growth or decadence of Maui's local paper.

The question of dealing with local wholesale firms instead of sending orders directly to the coast is receiving considerable attention just now among business men and in the papers on the Islands. Of course, generally speaking it is better to patronize home industries and keep the money at home, all things being anywhere near equal. That question was thoroughly threshed out in California some years since, when eastern houses crossed the Rockies and made a bid for California business. And it was solved there as it will be here. The Eastern houses captured and held some of the trade and California houses met the competition in other lines. Local business houses should heed the lesson learned by Californians, and bend their energies to meet competition rather than seek to arbitrarily bar out coast and eastern houses. Having done this the buyers should meet them half way, and keep our money at home.

The insult received by Delegate Kuhio at Columbus, Ohio, was humiliating, but there are two sides to the shield, and our delegate should have been broad-minded enough to have gracefully received the apology offered and forgotten the insult. As a matter of fact it was not an insult aimed either at Delegate Kuhio or at Hawaiians, but was a result of race prejudice against negroes, many of whom, through admixture with the white race, boast whiter skins than do Hawaiians. Hereafter, when such blunders occur, Hawaiians should good humoredly explain the situation, and they will at once discover that no race prejudice against Hawaiians, as such, exists in the States.

There is still one hundred thousand dollars of Hawaiian coin or "Kalakaua" money estimated to be in circulation on the Islands, and this money will cease to be legal tender after the first of next January. It is not likely that this money is in active circulation, and the danger is that many thrifty and frugal Hawaiians have hoarded away little nest eggs of this money for the proverbial "rainy day," not knowing that it will cease to be money on the first of the year. Consequently every means possible should be adopted to disseminate the fact among the Hawaiians, and thus prevent serious loss where it can be ill afforded.

The death of Col. W. H. Cornwell removes another prominent landmark in the history of modern Hawaii. A trusted member of the royal households, he epitomized the warm, social relations which existed between the Hawaiian ruling classes and a large colony of white men who were ever the ardent and trusted friends of the Hawaiians. His successful career on the Islands is unseparably blended with the history of the last days and downfall of the monarchy, and still he lived to see the sovereign power lodged in the hands of Hawaiians as American citizens.

As was expected, the Supreme Court have held the Board of Public Institution an illegal body, which however does not affect the validity of the County Act. But it is believed that there are other serious if not fatal defects in the county bill notably in the matter of its final passage. If this be true, it would be the height of folly to launch county government before the entire measure has been passed upon by the Supreme Court. Proper issues should be framed and presented for judicial determination at once, or as soon as possible.

The telegraphic announcement that the Russian occupation of Mukden is an unequivocal reply to the United States naval demonstration in Eastern waters is a slight lifting of the veil which enables one to glimpse at the secret forces at work in shaping the world's history from day to day. The real battle for peace or war between Japan and Russia is being fought out of sight, and it is only after the guns are booming that the world will be taken into the confidence of the warring powers.

The papers of Honolulu are growing somewhat yellow, and probably without cause, concerning the resignation of Treasurer Kepoikai. Without any definite information on the subject, the News predicts that when the proper time arrives, the resignation of Treasurer Kepoikai will be promptly handed to Governor Carter.

At one time, it was thought that wheat in California was; just as it is thought now that sugar in Hawaii is, the only practicable crop. Other industries of vast proportions have supplemented wheat raising in California, and will just as surely supplement sugar culture on the Islands.

DEATH OF

COL. W. H. CORNWELL

The community were startled and grieved to hear on Wednesday morning of the sudden death of Col. W. H. Cornwell, at his home in Waikapu. He experienced a severe attack of angina pectoris during Tuesday night and medical service was called in at four o'clock on Wednesday morning. Dr. Weddick, his attending physician, remained by him to the end which came about eight o'clock on Wednesday morning.

Col. Cornwell was born at Brooklyn, New York, in March 1841, being over 62 years old. While a boy he came with his father, the late Henry Cornwell, to the Islands and early in the sixties came to Waikapu where his father and James Louzada had purchased the lands of the Richardson estate, and started a sugar plantation. Col. W. H. Cornwell and Col. George W. Macfarlane afterwards bought this plantation and owned it until Col. Cornwell's interest was sold to the Wailuku Sugar Co.

About twenty years since, Colonel Cornwell became the lessee of the large cattle ranches of Waihulu and Keokea, which leases have recently been renewed for long terms. In the sale of the Waikapu lands Col. Cornwell reserved the old homestead which has ever since been his home, when on Maui.

During the reigns of King Kalakaua and Queen Liliuokalani, Col. Cornwell bore a prominent part in public affairs. While a member of the upper house, he joined the household of King Kalakaua as Major of Staff and member of the privy council. He was also a member of the privy council and Colonel in the Queen's household. He was also appointed Minister of Finance, but immediately retired upon a vote of want of confidence in his prime minister. He was again appointed Minister of Finance, and held the position till the overthrow of the monarchy. Colonel Cornwell was highly respected and honored by the late King and Queen, being decorated Grand Officer of the Crown of Hawaii, Officer of the Order of Kalakaua, Officer of the Order of Kapiolani, and also a Knight Commander of the Order of the Sacred Treasure of Japan. He was also past Master of Hawaiian Lodge, F. & A. M.

In 1870, Col. Cornwell was married to Miss Blanche Macfarlane, a sister of Colonel George W. Macfarlane, who died some years since, leaving three children, Mrs. J. H. Walker, Mrs. A. A. Braymer, and W. H. Cornwell, Jr. During the present year Col. Cornwell was married again to Mrs. Colvin, who survives him.

Col. Cornwell was a man of rare affability of character and was very popular among his hosts of friends on the Islands and on the Coast.

Funeral services were held at the Waikapu home on Thursday afternoon, and the remains were forwarded to Honolulu by Thursday's night's Mauna Loa, where they will be interred by the side of his wife, under the auspices of the masonic fraternity

At the Pioneer Mill it is expected that a little cane will be run through at the close of the week. The regular grinding season will probably begin on Monday next.

A concert in aid of the Kindergarten will be given this Saturday evening at Kindergarten Hall. The proceeds will be devoted to the purchase of additional chairs and other much needed articles. On account of the large attendance at the daily sessions of the school, some of the children are now obliged to sit on boxes or on the floor.

Mrs. Olsen and her son Reidar are enjoying a vacation in Honolulu.

Mr. Gibbs, the manager of the Olowalu Plantation, has been somewhat indisposed, but is now able to attend to business as usual. Mrs. Gibbs and her children were visiting friends in Lahaina on Tuesday.

The pupils of the Lahainaluna Industrial School have enjoyed a rare treat this week. Rev. W. D. Westervelt of Honolulu has given two very entertaining and instructive lectures on "China" and "Japan."

Maui's Board of Supervisors elect have already begun to take steps to change the site of the county buildings from their present location to a spot east of Market street, adjoining Wells Park. A plat of four acres has been surveyed, and arrangements for streets leading from Main, Market and Mill streets to the proposed new site are being perfected.

It is understood that the Wailuku Plantation Co., which owns this land has been approached on the matter, and that negotiations for an exchange of land are being broached. The government owns the land where the present court house stands as well as the school lot adjoining which would afford ample room for the new court house, jail, and other public buildings desired, if the new plans are not carried out.

Thanksgiving Football.

A game of football will be played at Wells Park on Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 26, 1903, at 3 p. m. between the Wailukus and Morning Stars. 20 minutes halves will be played. It is probable that the band will play before the game. The usual admission fee will be charged.
