ON THE COVER

John Wise of Kohala, Hawai'i, the first Native Hawaiian to play college football in America, was a crucial member of the 1892 Oberlin team that went undefeated. He was said to be able to run "with three men on his back without noticing the extra weight." Courtesy of the Oberlin College Archives.

Oberlin's school colors are cardinal red and mikado yellow, often informally referred to as "crimson and gold." These colors, which were approved for the college by a faculty committee in 1889, were taken from the family coat of arms of John Frederick Oberlin (1740-1826), for whom the college is named. Cardinal red was, therefore, selected as the cover color for this year's Journal.

DEDICATION

This volume of
The Hawaiian Journal of History is dedicated to the memory of

Helen Chapin
(1926–2012).

A long time member of the Hawaiian Historical Society,

Helen served as president from 1994–1996.

She also served as an associate editor of
The Hawaiian Journal of History from 1982–2008
and as editor from 1984–1992 and 2003–2004.

Helen contributed several articles to The Journal,

but she was known best for her popular Guide to Newspapers of Hawai'i 1834–2000,

which was published by the Hawaiian Historical Society in 2000.
