Very Little New England Capital Invested in the Islands

To the Editor of The Herald:

In an editorial notice of the attempt to injure Secretary Olney by contrasting the sugar interests of Cuba and Hawaii, it seems to be assumed by you that New England capitalists are investors in the sugar plantations on the Hawaiian Islands.

The facts do not warrant such a concession. Instead of millions of American capital at stake at that spot in the Pacific ocean, there is scarcely one dollar. Far more money has been sent from the United States for the development of plantations in the West Indies than was ever sent from New England to Honolulu.

Prior to 1876 our commercial relations with Hawaii had (with the decay of the whale fishery) gone from bad to worse, the attempts to make a profit on duty-paying sugar were failures, and there was scarcely a solvent mercantile house on the islands. The reciprocity treaty, the importation of coolie labor, the leasing of valuable government lands at a nominal rental, all acts of the constitutional monarchy changed all this, and by 1887, not only those of American lineage, but those whose ancestors came from Great Britain, Germany, and in one notable instance, several of minor importance, from China, had become wealthy capitalists. No portion of this wealth was imported from abroad; it was all wrung from Hawaii by those residents there, many of whom were born under that flag.

At the date mentioned (1887) they exhibited the arrogance which money brings, and, under terror of his life, the Hawaiian King acceded to an abrogation of the constitution, and the substitution of one drafted by them, granting them greater political privileges. They thus controlled not only the wealth, but the politics of the nation.

No Americans in any number emigrated; no capital of any volume was ever sent there. The sons, nephews and friends of the early missionaries kept Kalakaua in subjection during the declining years of his reign, sent him off on a tour around the world and he died abroad. Their conduct toward his sister, Liliuokalani, has passed into history. The keen satire of voting to his niece, the Princess Kaiulani, $2000 a year, when her inheritance from the days of Kamehameha the Great, confiscated by them, amounts to over $50,000 annually, is best appreciated by those familiar with the facts.

The only capital ever invested in Hawaii brought from this country is that represented by the Spreckels' estates. The only house nominally of New England connection is that of the Charles Brewer Company. The former is loyal to the monarchy. The head of the latter is Mr. P. C. Jones, who went to Honolulu when a boy. Having successively sworn allegiance to the Queen, then to Mr. Dole, he was very properly snubbed by Secretary Gresham, on offering to pay a United States income tax. "Hawaii is a foreign country," was Mr. Cleveland's pithy way of putting the truth.

The Irish citizens of Boston might with as good reason appeal to Great Britain to protect the capital they have accumulated here as the present ring of merchant adventurers appeal to Washington for the protection of "American capital" in Hawaii. JULIUS A. PALMER, JR. —Boston Herald.

The Royal annex was one of the most tastefully decorated resorts in town, even if the grand mirror has a splash upon it. It is surprising to learn what bracers for weak nerves Peacock's men can put up for you while you admire the latest Correggio.

TUESDAY, JULY 7, 1896.

CALIFORNIA'S NATAL DAY.

Monterey, the ancient capital of California, is to-day the scene of a mammoth rejoicing in honor of California's jubilee. Her lovely bay, second in beauty to perhaps that alone of Naples, is crowded with U. S. men-of-war, and pleasure yachts to do honor to the State; while on land there are military parades, processions, salutes, carnivals, banquets and fun galore, participated in not only by the highest officials of the State and all of fair California's counties, but also of the highest Federal officials within her borders.

Monterey, "in her mantle of ancient traditions," as Dan O'Connell sings in his dainty little poem on that town of sleeping beauty has seen "that dawn of the coming day" as the poet, twenty-five years ago, prophesied it would, but even in the minds of himself and his brother Bohemian optimists of those happy days, even the wildest dreamer of them all never anticipated this day of recognition, on such an immense scale, of the accident which 50 years ago to-day gave California to the United States instead of to Great Britain.

It is unnecessary to recall history, familiar even to our children, in regard to the race between the English and American warships who were equally anxious to steal the El Dorado from bankrupt Mexico; or to describe the deep chagrin that the Englishman experienced when on rounding Point Pinos he saw the Stars and Stripes floating from the warships, and the flag of his commercial rival braving the breezes from the Old Fort, now for many years a mere mound of verdant ruin.

And this was on the early morning of July 7th, 1846, a very memorable day in the history of the United States, of Great Britain and of Hawaii, for if our American friend had only been a few hours later, or our British friend only a few hours earlier, the political history and complexion of the whole Pacific slope west of the Rockies would have been materially altered.

England would have ruled clear from her Canadian colonies to her colonies beyond the seas by this time, unless a war of giants had robbed her of her spoils. The United States would have had in, what are now her most fertile States, a rival that would have deprived her of a vast amount of her wealth and influence, and might have made her a very formidable foe in case of disagreement.

It was the intimation of the richness of the mineral deposits of California that caused the desire of the two great nations to despoil Mexico. Had the prize fallen to England the days of '49 and the days of gold would have been hers—but it is useless to follow phantasies. Providence wrote her page of history in her own way, and with no unlavish hand gave to California Fame she has nobly won and richly deserved. All honor to her and to her pioneers and their descendants.

All remember how heroically, only a few short years afterwards, on that glorious September day, she was admitted into Statehood without undergoing the pupillage of Territorialism. She did not fawn or beg for it. She demanded it. Her brave sons did not mince their words. On the floors of Congress they presented their ultimatum to the Senate. It was the State of California or the Republic of California. Happily for the United States, in the bloody troubles that succeeded nearly 20 years afterwards, it was the State of California for she nobly helped to maintain the Union.

We have no cable by which President Dole can telegraph his congratulations to Governor James Budd on the felicitous anniversary, but THE INDEPENDENT on behalf of Hawaii, to the limited extent its influence permits, wafts its best wishes across the sea.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

The Austrians and Mexicans are quite flush with coin, which they are putting into circulation very rapidly. It is rough on the Mexican boys, however, for them to find that their dollar is only worth 50 cents. They long for the eutopian times of an International coinage that will pass current all the world over at its face value.

As we are informed, the float containing the young girls of Kawaiahao Seminary in the parade of the Fourth was an official one, authorized if not ordered by Government officials. We are also informed, but are willing to accept correction, that the parents and guardians were not consulted in regard to making these pretty little children a public display. If these statements should be correct THE INDEPENDENT strongly condemns the action of the authorities in charge be they Government officials or the Seminary principals. The propriety of such an exhibition, however pleasing to the beautiful children and enjoyed by the people, is doubtful for several reasons, even if the moral point of view be excluded.

Brother Peck in his baccalaureate sermon before the Oahu College graduates, said:

"Why did the people of the North fight for the freedom of those millions of slaves? That a burden of sin and wrong might be destroyed."

THE INDEPENDENT would ask Chaplain Peck why the Planters, who control the oligarchy, are introducing the lowest grade of Asiatic coolies into this country by the thousands. Is it to destroy "a burden of sin and wrong," or, while pauperizing the native Hawaiian and the white mechanic, to create thousands of slaves to enrich a few millionaires. Our imported slaves are of fighting races, and, perhaps, may some day create more trouble than the words of well intentioned preachers can control.

The P. C. A. republishes from the S. F. Examiner an article on "Kate Field's peculiarities." It is amusing but awfully stale. A reference to a serap book of ancient age, shows that the deceased journalist is reported to have used the self same "gangway gag" on landing from the Mariposa, as, was placed in her mouth upwards of ten years ago. A funny little piece of rhetorical imagination is in regard to the Hawaiian barefooted girl who had not been behind a horse. If Iwilei girls are not horsey, whenever any can be found around there or in Nuuanu valley, what are they?

It is difficult to understand, even by the opposition, why the officials of the Republic should be censured for not appearing at the ball given by American citizens on the evening of the third of July at the Independence Hall. The function was not official and there was absolutely no reason for the Ministers of Hawaii, to be there in their official capacity. The endeavor to construe their absence as an intended slur on our American friends is uncalled for. Mr. Dole and his men, may have many faults, but discourtesy and deliberate insults to their great Fosterland are never found. Dole, Damon, King and Cooper are not "dancing" men. They have got their hands full at present, and their absence from a social function, called a ball, should certainly not entitle them to severe censure by official organs. We are sorry that the Committee selected to receive the officials waited in vain for the appearance of our rulers. We can find no reason however for the growling at the rulers for not appearing. Give to the devil his due.

THE INDEPENDENT must again give notice that its paid carriers are not permitted to sell papers. It must be reluctantly confessed that there are grave grounds of suspecting that subscribers are robbed in order that some boys may make a dishonest nickle. If proof of this can be obtained an example will be made of the culprits, in the interest of honest carriers.

Honolulu, June 16, 1896.

The Legislature has adjourned and on the day of its adjournment we were favored with a phenomenal watery disturbance, possibly volcanic or possibly tracing its source from other sources.

Curiously enough also the Heavens shed tears at the hour of adjournment, and still drop the jewels that bless our land but make our streets muddy and uncomfortable.

Whether our dismissed legislators are responsible or not for these coincidences, it behooves us not to enquire. If they have discharged their duties to the public, who they are presumed to represent, they will receive their reward in due season at the polls or by preferment to government positions.

But we have nothing more to say about politics or unpleasant weather just now, we are thinking about the future, yours and our own; the pleasant times we intend to prepare for you when our summer times come on, and you are all rich and happy.

We suppose, for instance, that you will require an ice chest, or a refrigerator; or something of a similar character to preserve your dainties and delicacies. Well! we have the best and we will let you carefully inspect them before you buy.

Perhaps, you want a new bicycle for yourself or a loved one. We have the best on hand, and again inspection before purchase is our motto.

Our lamps, that modulated tone, you know, which is so pleasant here on a warm evening, and by the way, you of course remember that the moonlight nights are on hand, are still with us in limited numbers. We can let you have one or two if you approve of them. If you are contemplating a ladies lunch or a petit souper we can provide you with glass and Chinaware recherche and pleasing enough to carry by storm the hearts of your guests.

It is difficult to tell you all we have to offer to you in the various and divers collection of merchandise we are compelled to keep to please you. We would much prefer that you should call upon us and select for yourselves. If we please you we will be satisfied because we know you will call again.

Canine Affection.

To the innumerable instances of canine affection and fidelity already recorded may be added a local one. For many months past there has existed an extraordinary friendship between a very large dog belonging to one of our popular steamer captains, and a small rough haired terrier of a non-descript breed owned by Camarinos at the Fruit Market. Both dogs were of the same gender. They met and played together daily. The terrier followed Camarinos wherever he went, and frequently to an inconvenient degree, and this fidelity to his master cost him his life.

A few Sundays ago, Camarinos and a few friends went by the train to Ewa, and the dog, unknown to the party, followed them and boarded the train. On the return trip he jumped off at Remond Grove, expecting the party to alight there, and failed to board the train before it started. He followed alongside pluckily until the narrow cut by Dr. McGrew's place was reached, where having no margin to dodge the wheels he was run over. This fact was not known for several days afterwards, and the dog was expected home as he had several times before been lost for two or three days at a time.

The strange part of the tale showing the affection of the big dog for the little one now comes in. Ever since that memorable Sunday the big dog has paid half a dozen visits to the store daily in search of his little friend, and now is becoming quite disconsolate at the loss of his little playmate.

A Curious Dream, If Fishy.

It is an admitted fact that dreams even of the most extraordinary and frivolous character occasionally come true, and from the phenomena in superstitious countries, drew the inspiration of omens and decided the fates of rulers and Empires.

A friend of the writer's dreamed last night that he was standing on a lone rock in the mid Pacific, when three leviathans of the deep approached him, attacked him and were about to swallow him up, when from some unknown quarter a friend approached and drove them off.

He narrated his dream at day-break to several friends who laughed it off; but the coincidence was peculiar when in the early morning he happened to see the friend and rescuer of his dream passing behind the carriers of three immense Uluas.

Now there is a little problem for the "Interpreter of dreams" to solve and interpret. The dreamer is well-known to his friends as the author of the phrase, "Oh! What a jolly time we'll all have bye and bye."

Officers of Harmony Lodge.

The officers-elect of Harmony Lodge, No. 3, I. O. O. F., were duly installed last evening with the usual ceremonies, as follows: Noble Grand, Dr. C. T. Rodgers; Vice-Grand, O. L. Sorenson; Secretary, Geo. A. Turner; Treasurer, J. A. Magoon.

The following appointments for the term were then announced: Warden, T. P. Severin; Conductor, Paul J. Voeller; Guardian, O. F. Herrick; Chaplain, J. L. Dumas; R. S. N. G., D. T. Lawrence; R. S. V. G., Capt. Paul Smith; L. S. V. G., Jas. Bicknell. The filling of the other appointive offices was deferred until the next lodge meeting.

The Parks and People.

Yes, we are improving in many ways; but how long it takes! We were told that Bands in the parks would lead to orgies and horseplay, and all kinds of objectionable demonstrations. If we had Kiosks where tea, and bread and butter, and other mild refreshments were served we should have scenes of "open-air-rowdyism." Nothing of the kind. The park audiences are as well conducted as some garden parties, and the women are well dressed, and will compare favorably with Continental crowds on Continental fete days.—The London People.

How They Stand.

The following table shows the standing of the baseball teams now contesting on the Hawaiian Baseball Association grounds up to date:

	Star	1st Regiment	Honolulu	Kamehameha	Lost	Percentage
Star	1	1	2	2	6	.666
1st Regiment	1	1	1	1	3	.333
Honolulu	1	1	1	2	6	.666
Kamehameha	1	1	1	1	3	.333
Lost	1	2	1	2	6

The next game will be between the Stars and Honolulu.

So quietly conducted is the Criterion that it is a pleasure to drop in there and take a draught of that wholesome and invigorating Seattle beer while you have a social talk with a friend. Neatness, cleanliness and good behavior is a sine qua non to friendship here.

Mr. Chamberlain's Answer to Kruger.

SIGNIFICANT SPEECH.

Mr. Chamberlain presided at the S. African dinner at the Hotel Metropole. He was supported on his immediate right by Lord Loch, and on the left by Sir D. Currie, M. P. The right Hon. gentleman proposed the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to S. Africa," and said he envied his predecessors who had submitted that toast and who were able to speak under happier circumstances and with less restraint and reserve. He had hoped that the cloud might have rolled away ere this, but, unfortunately, that was not the case. The causes of discontent and unrest remained, and very little progress had been made towards reconciliation between the Dutch and the English. He could not pretend to regard the information he had received in reference to the Pretoria prisoners as entirely satisfactory (Cheers). He feared that it might not tend to the speedy realization of our objects. He regretted it, and he confessed that he was the more disappointed because he himself had always believed, and had expressed his belief, in the magnanimity of President Kruger. (Hear, hear.) He had believed that with him "the quality of mercy was not strained"—(hear, hear)—and that he would be the last person to be animated with anything like a vindictive feeling towards the men who,

WHATEVER MISTAKES THEY MIGHT HAVE COMMITTED,

and they all thought they had committed grievous errors—(hear, hear)—were, nevertheless, the men who had created by their energy and their enterprise the prosperity of the State over which the President presided. (Loud cheers.) They would understand, however, that he did not think that was the time or occasion for a public discussion of the present situation. (Hear, hear) There was the less necessity for it because, at all events, the policy of the Government had been clearly and definitely expressed, and would not be changed. (Prolonged cheers) They intended strictly to fulfill their legal obligations, but they intended also strictly to maintain their legal rights. (Renewed cheers.) They did not at all abandon the hope that they might be able to do something to bring together the two races that had been temporarily separated by recent events, and to secure a complete and a satisfactory understanding. (Hear, hear.) But he could not conceal from himself that the prosperity of S. Africa depended to-day less upon its marvellous natural resources, less upon its agricultural and mining industries, than it did upon the Statesmanship, the wisdom, and the moderation of the men who were mainly responsible for its political history. (Cheers) Political disturbances were not the only misfortune they had had to regret recently in S. Africa. They had the outbreak of rinderpest, and they had had the rising in Rhodesia. As regarded the first, the Government were doing what they could to prevent its worst results; and

AS TO THE RISING IN MATABELELAND, he thought they might congratulate themselves that it had been successfully suppressed. (Cheers.) Having referred to the great progress which had been made in the import and export trade of S. Africa during the past 10 years he went on to say that he had received a copy of an address from people of different races who had adopted S. Africa as their home and which to a marked extent, was disturbed by recent lamentable events. They humbly hoped that the Colonial Secretary would, with unabated energy, continue to resist all efforts that might be made to induce H. M. Government to depart from that policy of moderation and conciliation which could alone secure the real progress and true happiness of S. Africa. (Cheers) Those, said Mr. Chamberlain, were wise and patriotic words. He did not doubt that the great majority, at any rate, of the people of this country were impressed by similar sentiments. We must, he added, have patience. We could afford to wait. (Cheers.) Time was on our side, and he did not doubt that its healing hand would close the wounds that had been so rudely opened, and would remove all obstacles in the way of the prosperity of S. Africa. (Prolonged cheers).—Sir D. Tennant, Mr. Walter Pease and Sir W. Dunn responded.

A Wayside Romance.

If one may be permitted at the moment to speak of any other game than cricket or any other pastime than cycling, I have just come across a little poker story told by the late William Florence, one of the most breezy of American actors and most generous of men. He wrote a book on poker, you know, that was published by Messrs. Routledge, a very bright and clever contribution to a very entertaining and exciting game of card—a development, I believe, of the English game of brag, and if so a development that is complimentary to the genius of our American cousins. It was introduced to England by the late Gen. Schenk, and was popular for years in the delightful days of the Countess of Waldegrave at Strawberry Hill before it took its place in a general way at English card tables. It is a simple story, but quite as good as some novels, and it has the advantage of being true. Sylvester Shively, who died at Scranton, Pennsylvania, was a college bred man and a gambler. He won his wife through a game of poker on a Mississippi steamer, the River Queen. The game was unlimited. In those days that was the rule. It had been a long and serious game. One of the players, dropping his last dollar, drew his chair back from the table, walked to the side of the boat, whipped out a revolver, and put it to his head. Shively, who had followed him on the instant, was quick enough to seize the man, and presently led him to his cabin. There he found a beautiful girl, whom the stranger introduced to him. She was his daughter. It was a case of love at first sight. The courtship may be said to have begun "right there." Shively was moved to pity as well as love. Eventually he restored to the stranger the fortune he had lost, married the daughter, and gave up gambling for ever, as he believed. That was certainly his intention. He lived very happily with his wife, and was well-to-do. Some years afterwards, having business at Harrisburg during a session of the Legislature, after great persuasion he was induced to play just one game, and it was his last; he got up a winner of 30,000.10ls.—Joseph Hatton.

"All is Vanity."

By the way there are no ends of books on poker and how to play the game. If I were a compiler I have often thought I would collect all the stories of the game and make a volume of them. I offer the suggestion to the industrious and the curious in current history. But books teach you little, and even experience does not bring the game within scientific lines. You can't play poker as you can whist, and know what cards are out. The fun of the game is that you play it on your own hook; you have no partner to worry you. If you make a mistake the peril and the loss are your own. Even the most skillful player at whist is fain to confess that cards win the trick; but at poker the big hand is often the greatest danger, tempting its holder to back it against a better that he knows not of. There are plenty of lessons of life in poker—sometimes you may get a lesson that lasts you for life, as was the case with the Mississippi traveler and his pretty daughter. "When you know how to live," says philosophy, "it is time to die." Similarly it may be said of poker that by the time you begin to understand it you are broke, or to quote the cynical poet:

He stuck to poker zealously,
And grief it is to say it,
When he knew all about it he
Had naught with which to play it.
