A WOMAN OF DARING.

THE PRINCESS SALM-SALM'S EXPERIENCES THROUGH THREE WARS.

She Married a Prince Serving in the Union Army, Followed Him to Mexico and Saved His Life, Then to the Franco-Prussian War, Where He Was Killed.

(Copyright, 1893, by American Press Association. Book Rights Reserved.)

At a heart given through the language of the eyes, she was the first to see the German prince wearing the uniform of the Union Army.

Staff of his fellow countryman, General Louis Blenker, and the army lay in front of Washington, Miss Leclercq was included with a party of visitors from the Capital City who went to the ranks of the camp to see the sights.

The prince for a couple of years did not get away from the circle of capital intrigue, and being an honest, unassuming man, he lacked the diplomacy needed to make headway in the scramble for preference.

Through her cleverness entirely Salm-Salm was saved from the disgrace of dismissal when his superior, General Blenker, fell under a cloud, and was appointed colonel of the Eighth New York regiment.

During all this time the princess had not scrupled to take advantage of the Mexican offer to leave the country forthwith. The officer who delivered the order had a carriage in waiting, and an escort to see her to the seacoast.

Several plans for this failed and at last the princess took the matter in hand. She found in Washington several hundred unassigned recruits which were secured after a long battle of diplomacy.

One day she broke down the rules of discipline fixed by the prince himself. Sitting in his tent while he was absent, she heard the sounds of human distress at the guardhouse nearby.

Before coming to America the prince had been a soldier in his native country, Prussia, and also in the army of Austria.
