Bill No. 78, Hawaiian Banking Act.

I have been asked to give my opinion of the Bill entitled "The Hawaiian Banking Act," introduced into the Hawaiian Legislature by a Noble of the Kingdom of Hawaii, consideration of which was pending at the date when my correspondent wrote from Honolulu, August 17, 1892.

I have some hesitation in complying with this request, because it is a matter with which I, as an individual, have no concern; but inasmuch as I have, from association and otherwise, a deep interest in the progress and stability of the Hawaiian state, I shall present very briefly my views upon this remarkable project of law.

First: it is crude, ill-digested, and wholly unworkable. Second: it is contradictory in its provisions, would entail enormous expense if the scheme were modified to admit of even its partial working, and provides no sufficient check against collusion and fraud on the part of the public officers charged with the duty of conducting the proposed national loan and mortgage bank.

These objections should suffice to defeat the measure if submitted to any representative body having business training, and no doubt there are several members of the Hawaiian Legislature who will point out these and many other defects in the same line. But the foregoing are simply objections to the details of the Bill. The main and fatal objection is to its principle. It is drawn in utter ignorance of the principles of banking, the uses and functions of money, and the laws or rules of credit. No doubt it is drawn with an honest and praiseworthy intent, but it is based upon the fallacy that the state, by fiat, can make or create money which that brilliant financial buccaneer, John Law, used to advance his own fortune and to impoverish France under the Regency in the early part of the 18th century. The assignats issued by the Bank of France "made money plentiful;" that is, it inflated values, promoted an era of luxury and speculation which culminated in the Mississippi or West India scheme; but it steadily drove gold and silver coin out of France, and bore its ripe fruit in the French Revolution with its attendant horrors. For when the facts of history are calmly and truthfully weighed, without sentiment or prejudice, it will be found that the great social upheaval in France at the close of the 18th century, which wiped out the ancient system of government, was caused wholly and solely by scarcity of money and not by the excesses or misconduct of the nobility. "Paper money" was the cause of that political and social cataclysm.

This was in obedience to what is known as the Gresham Law, namely, that it is an unvarying rule of finance that the less valuable medium of exchange, or money, should displace the more valuable. The French object lesson is too remote, however, to be of practical value to us, although the French people have profited by it themselves and now have the most perfect and secure banking system in the world; but the note issue of the Bank of France is secured by a coin reserve of corresponding volume. A note issue upon any other basis is as certain to drive gold and silver out of circulation, and bring about financial ruin, distress, as the rising of the sea brings light and warmth to the earth. The French silver note is payable in silver. In this it differs from the United States, which has a large emission of paper, but which is not protected by a coin reserve as in the case of France. It is true that the silver certificates are secured by silver bullion deposited with the United States Treasury, and that the greenbacks, or Treasury notes, are secured by a gold deposit of less than one-third their face value; but it was the issue of those very greenbacks, to tide over a temporary financial difficulty at the beginning of the war, which added so enormously to its cost, because they went into circulation for five years together with two hundred and fifty million dollars of State Bank notes, and of necessity this currency kept both gold and silver out of circulation. The U. S. Government was compelled in effect to purchase gold at an enormous premium; and to avoid utter financial collapse in 1865 the State Banks issue was taxed ten percent, whereupon these worthless notes disappeared, and the National Banking system, the notes of which are secured upon United States bonds, was inaugurated. But when the war began the country was without money, that is, the State Bank notes had driven all the gold and nearly all the silver out of the country; there was practically no gold, and silver was at a premium. When the "fiat money" of the United States was added to the worthless paper emitted by local banks all over the Union, the effect may be imagined. At all events, it was speedily felt by the country, and the taxpayers are now suffering from it.

The National Banking system was faulty, however, in this, that the note issue being secured by U. S. bonds, there is necessarily a contraction in circulation proportionate to the cancellation of the bonds. This would not have happened if the note issue had been secured upon a coin reserve, or gold and silver bullion. It has led to the recent agitation for "more money," that is, "fiat money," the Alliance or third party, led by General Weaver, having formulated a national banking policy similar in its main features to the Horner Banking Bill of Hawaii. Should this party succeed we should have in the United States, within a very short time, similar monetary conditions as prevail in the Argentine Republic, and from almost precisely like causes.

Congress, however, has been far from blameless. In July, 1890, to meet the demand for more money, Senators Sherman and Jones secured the passage of a law limiting the purchase of silver, and providing for the issue of silver notes against such purchase, redeemable in gold on option of the Treasury. All paper money is so redeemable in the United States. As a matter of fact, these notes are treated as gold notes. There are in excess of one hundred millions of these notes in circulation, and they are being turned out at the rate of about $100,000 a day. The effect, however, and the inevitable effect under the Gresham law, is that these notes have steadily depleted the United States Treasury of its gold, while adding to the silver hoard, as the Treasury statements issued every ten days conclusively show.

In January, 1889, the net gold balance in the United States Treasury was $194,655,264. That was before the new paper issue of course. On January 31, 1891, nearly seven months after their first issue, the net gold balance had fallen to $141,982,946; and on July 30, 1892, after two years of active circulation in daily increasing volume, the net gold balance stood at $110,444,391, against which there was outstanding $105,566,176 of the Treasury notes of 1890, redeemable in gold. Thus, the gold balance really available had been reduced to $4,878,221 at the close of last month.

While this gradual disappearance of gold is taking place, the silver coin kept piling up in the Treasury vaults because the "paper money" greenbacks and Treasury notes of 1890—supplanted it as a circulating medium; and when silver ceased to perform its functions as money (for it is not the medium of redemption), as a matter of course it steadily fell in value as a mere commodity, until India, which is on a silver basis, became so depressed that it recently petitioned for a stoppage of silver coinage and the adoption of a gold standard. Meanwhile our gold reserves are being transferred to Europe, while our liabilities in gold remain and go on steadily increasing. Austria will soon be on a gold basis, at our expense without an effort on her part apparently. This is why gold is leaving us for Europe steadily, despite our enormous exports and favorable trade balance and exchange. We must speedily come back to a coin basis or pay the penalty.

Senator Sherman saw the effect of his Silver Bill, and attempted to have a repealing Act passed last session; but the House did not pass it, because it made no provision for the redemption of the outstanding Treasury notes issued under it, and would have stopped the purchase of gold. This would only have intensified the evil; and the fact that it was proposed to have an unlimited free coinage of silver, on demand of private owners of silver bullion, without any safeguards whatever, was in itself enough to condemn the Bill. From what has been written it follows that "paper money," unless secured by, or based upon, a coin reserve sufficient for that purpose, must ultimately drive gold and silver out of circulation. It may temporarily inflate values, but all inflation ultimately results in a lowering of values; as witness our "boom towns" in California, the condition of Melbourne and generally of all the Australian Colonies. "Fiat money" has been a costly and wasteful experiment in the United States, and we have not yet paid the uttermost farthing which is due upon that experiment. The English Banking system is faulty, and the Bank Charter Act is responsible for the frequent monetary and financial crises in England. But great and rich countries like the United States and England may afford to risk serious errors in their monetary laws, while a weak and relatively poor country like Hawaii cannot. A bill like the one under consideration should not be entertained. Its discussion even must do harm.

The second section reads like a huge joke, considering the state of Hawaiian finance. The 27th section adds 1 percent to the interest payable on 6 percent bonds. But there is no need to analyze the bill by sections, it is so loosely drawn. Why convert the Post Office into a Banking house? If there is to be a State Bank the Finance Department should do the work. You have only to pass the Horner Bill, and grant a franchise to the Louisiana Lottery, to finish Hawaii politically, financially, and morally.

ROBT. J. CREIGHTON, San Francisco, August 29, 1892. He's in the Mud. EDITOR BULLETIN:—The P. C. A. of this date has a communication from a Mr. Mud, who seems to be very much muddled, and the mud which sticks fast to him only muddles his vision, and he becomes the muddiest of all the wallowing, muddy, muddier, muddiest mud defiled muddled mud daubers. He tries to fling mud at the old National Reform Party of 1890 by saying that they were elected "under false pretences." Perhaps he (Mr. Mud) was one of those who got "left out in the cold" on that election day, or perhaps he was the chap that fell into the taro patch up in Pauoa Valley. Well, Mr. Mud, please wash the mud off your face and get again into the ranks of the undefiled by mud. RAJAR. Honolulu, October 1, 1892.
